Castro Faces Big Revolt

MIAMI (AP)—Former Cuban businessman Rafael Garcia-Navarro said Saturday a new rebel force of 4,000 persons has been formed in Cuba and plans an uprising against Fidel Castro.

He predicted Castro will be overthrown this year.

He said Cubans are angered by the trade pact signed with Russia and will rally to a full-scale revolution which already has ample backing.

Their parents and two other children, sleeping in another bedroom dashed through the flames to safety Friday night. The house was destroyed. The dead, all children of France to Seek Atom Secrets?

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Charles de Gaulle is expected to follow up France's emergence as a nuclear power with an insistent new bid for sharing United States atomic weapons and know-how. (See also Page 34.)

The prospect is embarrassing to Eisenhower administration leaders. They fear new friction with de Gaulle inside the North Atlantic Alliance.

This is one reason the government reacted with such obvious coolness to the Paris announcement of an achievement which would ordinarily have been expected to draw congratulations from an ally.

President Eisenhower was informed of the shot, but the White House said there would be no comment. The state department said only that the French feat was no surprise.

Washington leaders were keenly aware that the French test explosion instantly drew condemnation and protest from countries in Africa and elsewhere, including Japan. The American administration evidently was concerned that these countries would resent a congratulatory message to Paris.

On the other hand, officials were equally aware that the state department comment risks incurring resentment of the French. They have put long years and much money into the effort to detonate the device they hoped would win new prestige for France as the world's fourth nuclear power.

The U.S. law governing international atomic relations, last amended in 1958, permits exchanges of atomic secrets with Britain but not with any other country.

FALLS FAR SHORT
One shot like that in the Sahara at dawn Saturday falls far short of making France a nuclear power within the meaning of this law.

But the real problem, as officials privately concede, is not so much French progress in this enormously costly atomic arms race as it is the record of political instability in France over the 15 years since the Second World War ended.

In New Delhi, visiting Nikita Khrushchev expressed regret over the test but said he still feels de Gaulle favors an easing of world tension.

Crowd Waits in Rain For News of Royal Babe

LONDON (AP)—The Queen rested quietly in Buckingham Palace Saturday while a small crowd waited outside in pouring rain for news of a new royal baby.

Inside the gates, the palace staff was reported betting the royal baby will be a boy born on St. Valentine's Day—today.

Portable television cameras were in place at the entrance, ready to record the arrival of the Queen's physician when the baby is due and the posting of the royal announcement when it is born.

'Canadians Shouldn't Be Smug'

WINDSOR, Ont. (UPI)—Liberal leader Lester Pearson said Saturday night that Canadians have no cause to be smug or superior about the progress made towards racial and religious tolerance in Canada.

Pearson, speaking at a Brotherhood Week rally, said Canada's record might not be so good if Canadians had faced conditions faced by other countries.

He said Canadians should strive to root out "every lingering manifestation of the disease of intolerance and discrimination" where it exists here.

Coffee Break In Canada For Mikoyan

STEPHENVILLE, Nfld. (CP)—Russian deputy premier Anastas Mikoyan last night chatted with town officials over a cup of coffee while waiting for his plane to return for a journey home from Cuba.

Wearing a broad grin, the usually stern-looking Russian stepped from his plane and distributed Russian souvenirs to a group of youngsters who clustered about him.

HORNEPAYNE, Ont. (CP)—One man was killed and four others sent to hospital Saturday when a westbound CNR Super-Continental passenger train and an eastbound freight collided near this small community north of Lake Superior.

The CNR in Toronto confirmed the death of Albert Prairie, about 50, of Hornepayne, engineer of the passenger train. He had been listed as missing and presumed dead.

No severe injuries were reported among the 67 passengers. Many suffered minor injuries.

IN HOSPITAL

In hospital were Jack Keeler, engineer of the other train, with burns and a broken leg; C. A. Massey, a fireman, broken arm; Ken Statton, a brakeman, broken arm, and Frank Walton, a fireman, broken leg.

Train passengers were taken to Hornepayne where they were scheduled to leave later Saturday night on an alternative CNR route.

The CNR said it did not know when the mainline track would be cleared.

A pilot who flew the first medical team to the crash said "a great column of thick black smoke" rose from the wreckage.

There was no immediate explanation of what caused the crash shortly after noon Saturday on a single track about 34 miles west of this community, 210 miles west of the Lakehead.

The passenger train left Montreal Friday and was due in Winnipeg Saturday night.

Both diesel locomotives caught fire after the wreck and indications were that fire might have spread to some of the cars of the freight and to non-passenger cars on the passenger train.

However, a relief train sent out from Hornepayne pulled all but one of the passenger coaches back. Two mail cars, a baggage car and "the coach" were left at the scene.

The Red Cross Hospital in Hornepayne, closed for a month due to a shortage of staff, was re-opened on an emergency basis and all available nurses were called in.

The temperature was about 20 at the time of the crash.

Pentagon Rapped

'Meddlers' Harm A-Sub Supremacy

WASHINGTON (AP)—Vice-Admiral Hyman Rickover says he fears the U.S. may lose its lead over Russia in nuclear submarines because of meddling by Pentagon higher-ups in the work of his team of naval atomic experts.

"If we don't, we will give up 10 years of advantage, and that is what I'm afraid is going to happen to us because of the vast amount of interference to which my organization is subject."

Rickover appeared recently before the U.S. Senate space and preparedness committees. Asked about the over-all contest between the Soviet Union and the U.S., Rickover replied: "We are ahead of them chronologically, but as far as the rate of progress is concerned they definitely are ahead of us."

Rickover pictured himself and his top atomic technicians as "subject to daily and constant petty harassments . . . by petty minds who are placed in positions of authority."

He said naval atomic experts must spend so much time writing reports and explaining matters to a constantly changing group of superiors that it is almost impossible to get on with the job.

Designed To Probe Ionosphere

By IAN STREET

Canada's first satellite is scheduled to be carried into outer space early in 1961 aboard an American rocket.

Dr. William Petrie, Victoria-born superintendent of the operational research group of the Defence Research Board, said in Victoria last night the capsule, packed with Canadian-designed instruments, will probe the secrets of the ionosphere.

First announcement that Canada would participate in U.S. satellite experiments was made several months ago by Prime Minister Diefenbaker.

BIG CONTRIBUTION

Dr. Petrie said in an interview Canada has a big contribution to make in space science. He said only the U.S. and Russia, at present, have resources to enter the space technology race—the actual launching of heavy rockets and satellites into space.

He said Canada's satellite, to be launched from a U.S. base next year, is being designed to orbit between 300 and 400 miles above the earth.

SPECIAL JOBS

"One of the special jobs handled by the DRE is a continuing study of the ionosphere, especially in the far north," the scientist said.

"We are planning to actually put our own instruments in a satellite that will cruise above the ionosphere to give us a look at it from above."

Dr. Petrie will address the Royal Astronomical Society in the auditorium at Victoria University on Monday at 8 p.m. His subject will be exploration of the earth's outer atmosphere and space.

40-400 MILES

The ionosphere is an electrically-conducting layer in the earth's outer atmosphere—beyond the stratosphere—and extends from heights of approximately 40 miles to 400 miles above the earth.

DRE scientists for several years past have studied the effects of solar disturbances on the ionosphere which frequently result in a blackout on long distance radio communications.

A team of Canadian scientists now is experimenting with lightweight versions of the bulky radio and radar equipment used on ground installations in the ionosphere research project.

CARRIED ALOFT

"One of our big jobs is making the miniature equipment that will be carried aloft in the satellite," said Dr. Petrie. The payload for the ionosphere shot probably will be restricted to 100-200 pounds.

Dr. Petrie said: "Canada in the past 10 years has been

Help Homeless Refugees Vanier Urges Canadians

ALL ABOARD

With G. E. Mortimore

Will the people of the newly independent African territories become worse racial or national snobs than the white men who used to be their masters?

That would be a tragedy. In a posthumous article that appears in the current Atlantic Monthly, a wise French teacher named Albert L. Guerard (who died last November) warns his African friends against European fallacies.

Among these are the continental fallacy, "Asia for the Asians," "Africa for the Africans," and the heresy of nationalism.

Unrealistic, Unlovely Utopia

"The nations are still haunted with that ideal of unity, which is natural when one man alone owns and rules the land, but which is an absurdity when millions have won the right to express their own thoughts and defend their own interests."

"The strictly national model—a tight territory with impenetrable frontiers; with one government, one faith, one language, one culture—that Nationalism (argues the writer) is a comparatively new idea, and it is already fading. In Europe it was the "prolonged shadow of monarchy."

"When kings failed to provide enlightened leadership, they were cast aside, and the people took hold. But democracy preserved the... trappings of the old dynastic state."

The Fallacy of Race

He is into tricky ground here, but it would take a lot of time, space and thought to discuss it—more than I have to spare.

Above all, he advises Africans not to fall into the fallacy of race. If whites have bullied and snubbed Africans, there is no reason for Africans to bully and snub the whites, or the yellows.

Two wrongs don't make a right. "A man should think of himself as a human being, and not as the member of a group determined... by some chance physical trait."

On the question of racism and nationalism, Albert Guerard's advice to the Africans is good advice to Europeans and North Americans, too.

To Speak Here

Speaking about world refugee problems in Victoria this week will be Peter Casson, United Nations High Commissioner of Refugees in Canada. Mr. Casson will address Junior Chamber of Commerce and Victoria U.N. members on Wednesday, and the B.C. Council of Women, Victoria University students and a public meeting on Thursday.

Husky Leaps On Leopard

PATERSON, N.J. (AP)—An enraged husky attacked a leopard yesterday during a circus wild animal act. A trainer separated the animals after 12 minutes. Neither appeared critically wounded. A crowd of about 4,000, including many children, saw the fight.

Eight huskies and eight leopards were lined in the cage when the dog suddenly leaped at the leopard.

Huge Snowstorm Shocks Dixie

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)—A gigantic snowstorm shocked the U.S. southeast Saturday, burying communities in a foot of snow, marooning hundreds of motorists and creating havoc with transportation, sporting events and business.

Charging in from snow-plastered Texas, the storm swamped Virginia with more than 13 inches, Tennessee 11 and the Carolinas 10.

A fall of up to 18 inches was expected in some parts of Virginia before the storm abated. Snows of two to eight inches blanketed numerous areas of Mississippi and Alabama. Southeast Arkansas measured five.

At least 10 persons died in the violent weather which gripped usually mild Dixie from southern Maryland into Louisiana. Six others died Friday when the storm pounded Texas.

300 SNOWBOUND—More than 125 motorists were stranded in Alabama as snow piled to hub-cap levels. Some 300 persons were snowbound in homes near Huntsville, Ala., including several missile scientists from Redstone arsenal.

Sleet and freezing rain put a treacherous glaze on fringe areas of the storm and torrential rains deluged the lower half of the south.

Gale force winds raged along the Atlantic coast and warnings were hoisted from Florida to Atlantic City. Abnormally high tides were expected to pound the lowlands.

Heavy snow warnings were issued for New York and New England. Eastern Kentucky was told to be ready for 10 to 18 inches.

Meanwhile, a storm raging over the Gulf of Mexico disrupted land, sea and air traffic in Mexican coastal areas.

The ports of Tampico, Veracruz, Coahuila, Campeche and Progreso were closed for small craft and fishing boats.

Warnings were issued to northern points were cancelled. Inland areas were crippled by heavy snows.

'Monster' Sought

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP)—Detectives mingled with mourners here yesterday as friends and neighbors paid last respects to a pretty girl slain in a murder so vicious officials called it the work of "a human monster."

Hundreds filled St. Catherine's Church to attend a requiem mass for 18-year-old Sandra Valade.

Detectives on hand looked for some sign of the killer who beat, stabbed, criminally assaulted and shot the secretary. Her body was found atop a snowbank on a lonely road Wednesday.

She had vanished 10 days earlier after leaving a bus for a one-mile walk to her home on the outskirts of Manchester. Officials pressed a statewide search for the murderer as alarmed parents and school officials cancelled several evening dances and social affairs because he was still at large.

"I am sure that in future we will carry on many more collaborative projects with U.S. scientists."

MUST DO THIS

He said "unless someone says we must do this for the sake of prestige," he can't see much use in Canada entering the field of space technology with her own missiles.

"Canada can do some of the basic scientific work that remains to be done before the exploration of outer space gets under way," said Dr. Petrie. For example, the scientist said, the Van Allen belt of intense radiation surrounding the earth does not appear to have holes over the poles.

IT IS POSSIBLE "It is possible that a manned space vehicle may have to be fired through these holes," said Dr. Petrie.

This may be done from somewhere in Canada's northland. "Since there are facilities at Fort Churchill in Manitoba it is not unreasonable to assume that the launching may take place there—but there is only one catch," he said.

EXTREMELY COSTLY

"Facilities of the kind needed to fire rockets big enough to launch a manned space vehicle are extremely costly. Even the U.S. only has two launching sites, at Cape Canaveral and Vandenberg."

Dr. Petrie said the purpose of Canada's own experimental Black Brant rocket manufactured in Winnipeg is "only to test the propulsion system." He said it is designed to travel "a few hundred miles" into space.

Scientists of the Pacific Naval Laboratory at Esquimalt are carrying out basic research into the magnetic fields within the ionosphere. It is hoped to use the magnetic impulses to detect lurking submarines in the seas around Canada's shores. Dr. William Petrie, 47, is a brother of Dr. R. M. Petrie, director of the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory, Little Saanich Mountain.

Heiress Poor, Happy

MIAMI BEACH (AP)—A 17-year-old New York heiress, object of a six-month search, was arrested Saturday with her husband, Albert Edward Brady, an $85-a-week delicatessen store clerk.

"We don't want money. All we want is to be left alone," cried pretty Roberta (Ronni) Orr Brady, daughter of the late Robert Orr, millionaire advertising executive.

The runaway lovers were tripped by a routine fingerprint check on Brady's application for a job.

Brady was charged with abduction and his wife with grand larceny. Police said she is accused of stealing $1,000 in cash and $2,400 a traveller's cheques from her mother's home.

When Ronni's mother prepared to send her to a Swiss finishing school last July she eloped with Brady, 26. Ronni is now six months pregnant.

NOT VERY BAD

B. S. H. Tye

"My hearing is not very bad. I can hear quite well if only one person is speaking to me, but when there are several people in the room and a general conversation is going on, I do not know half of what is said."

How many hundreds of times have we heard the above during the 22 years that we have been fitting hearing aids?

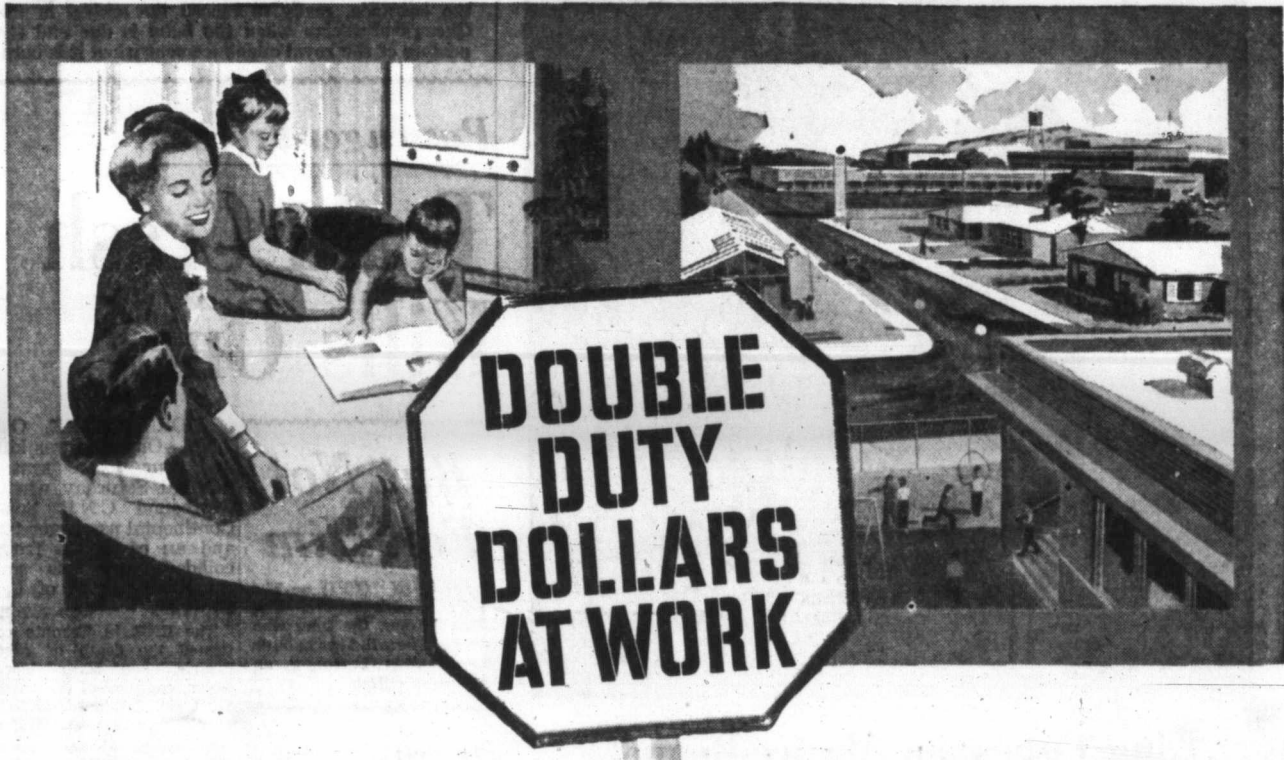

At one time it was seldom possible to fit a case with a hearing-aid as mild as this, but it is a different story today. With our latest hearing aids we can fit even the mildest cases with behind-the-ear or eyeglass models. No matter what degree of deafness you have, provided you still have some residual hearing, we can help you hear again.

Negroes Heckled, Arrested

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP)—Police arrested 41 Negro students yesterday on charges of trespassing on private property during demonstrations against segregated lunch counter service.

The North Carolina-born passive resistance movement also spread into South Carolina—heartland of the Deep South—and into a ninth North Carolina city. White spectators heckled the Negroes in each new location.

PRIVATE PROPERTY—The arrests occurred in a shopping centre here. Virtually all the Negroes are students at St. Augustine's College of Shaw University.

There is no law barring the peaceful demonstrations, as such. But the police explained that the shopping centre is private property and when the demonstrators refused an official's request to leave the area they were arrested.

French Physicist's Claim

Einstein 'Solved'

PARIS (AP)—A young French atomic physicist claimed Saturday to have worked out the master equation in which Albert Einstein and other senior scientists sought to explain the secret of the universe.

The "unitary equation" of 35-year-old Jean Charron, a research scientist for the French atomic energy commission, is an attempt to link the electro-magnet, nuclear and gravitational forces under one formula.

Scientists believe that once they establish a connection between these basic forces, they will be able to explain the mysterious origin and laws of the universe.

Leading physicists and mathematicians around the world are understood to have started the intricate checks and rechecks of Charron's theory to determine whether the young Frenchman deserves a place among history's great scientists.

"I do not think that anyone can contest my results," Charron said.

Break-In Charges Facing Teenagers

Five juveniles have been rounded up in connection with two recent break-ins and vandalism at Royal Canadian Sea Cadet headquarters on Robert Street.

Two teenagers questioned Friday by city juvenile officers will be charged with breaking and entering the premises and theft of two rifles and several hundred rounds of ammunition Jan. 3.

Three other juveniles were taken into custody Thursday for a break-in there Wednesday in which clothing had been scattered and trampled, and records and charts torn up.

Vandalism was also reported at Oaklands school overnight Thursday where entry was gained by breaking a window. Less than $50 worth of property was stolen, it was reported. Damage was negligible.

One for the Rostrums

PREMIER BENNETT'S fourth budget of the administration's current term is, like himself, vigorous, confident and optimistic. In the natural expectation it is a pre-election piece, and every facet of his speech as finance minister appears to confirm this. In the $56,000,000 "bonus" which the Social Credit regime is preparing to split with the people, from whom it will have been collected, there indeed are not many who appear to have been left out. Politically the budget is astute, and will glow in full color when in all likelihood it is exhibited on the rostrums of B.C. in a season or so.

Economically the premier admits of some doubt, of a need for caution in the forward march of British Columbia. Politically the budget soars. To achieve peak expenditures of $331,120,119 in 1960-61 the administration is increasing its estimated receipts and drawing down the last of its declared liquid reserves. It is from this comes the $56,000,000 melon now to be cut. While this is inflationary in that public expenditures will rise sharply, Mr. Bennett is in the position to say that the present rates of taxation will apply without change. It is another question whether instead there should not have been a hold-the-line program this year with retention of cash reserves, or even a reduction of taxation with the use of some of them.

Industry has so argued, and finds in the budget little help in a provincial way for its export and domestic marketing troubles. Meanwhile the municipalities are learning that the melon to be cut is a provincial one, with only a small trickle of its juices flowing back into municipal coffers. The Mursion formula has now been flatly rejected; the administration is patching at school costs here and there; but the steady downward drift of municipal finances under rising costs is not arrested. A promise to launch the long-sought school-finance inquiry by commission would have been welcomed, but the budget sidesteps the issue.

On its positive side, in things to be done the program is more impressive. The extension of hospital insurance to chronic care cases, and further sums to be voted for the treatment of mental health will be approved on their own merits. Public services are being fully funded. The $22 increase in home-owners' grants towards municipal taxes should help, though it may not outweigh the current increase in civic mill rates. If the money can be found, everyone will applaud whatever can be done to help the lot of the aged, the blind, the handicapped and those living on the borderline of subsistence. The government is being generous towards the capital outlay of both B.C. universities, with attendant student-aid and bursaries. These moves, electorally, will be popular.

In its debt structure, British Columbia has surmounted one hurdle, but faces another. The direct debt (uncallable finally until 1977) has been pegged at $96,000,000 and is wholly covered by sinking funds, with earnings more than sufficient to carry its charges without resort to taxation. B.C. is the second Province in Canada to be able to say so. The indirect, guaranteed debt however has grown to $543,220,000, against which only fractional sinking funds are reported. Included in the contingent debt, besides PGE, toll and power agencies, is in excess of $93,000,000 of municipal capital borrowings that have been provincially guaranteed. In sum, that is a formidable roster of borrowings.

New Hope for Thetis Lake

WITH parks and nature sanctuaries the important thing is not so much who owns them as that everything necessary should be done for their preservation so that the maximum use and pleasure may be derived by the public. With that in mind the question as to which agency is best equipped to undertake that responsibility is easily answered. Obviously the provincial department of recreation and conservation can do a better job in perpetuity than any local body, subject to the greater difficulties of finding revenue and the changes of mind and policy of succeeding councils.

Since its recent creation, and long before that when its functions were performed by a branch of the forest service, the department of recreation and conservation has done magnificent work for the protection of natural beauty spots and their development where development is to the public advantage. It has a staff of ably trained men of vision and understanding, wise in the selection of areas with park potential and in planning how best they may be managed. It is difficult therefore to see how the City of Victoria could go wrong in turning over Thetis Lake Park to the Province, if the government is willing to accept responsibility. That would ease the city council out of its present problems and embarrassment in connection with the B.C. Electric Company's request to run a transmission line through one corner of the park.

Without any commitment at this too early stage, Recreation Minister Westwood has opened the door wide to the proposal that the Province should take over, presumably in much the same way as the city-owned Goldstream Park was taken over by British Columbia a short time ago. There is further encouragement in the minister's promise that the idea will be investigated with all possible speed and that the government should have a report in about three weeks.

This is the most heartening development so far in the controversy over Thetis Lake Park. Earlier the government's policy was to leave to local ownership and control those parks close to cities. Mr. Westwood's enthusiastic interest in the Thetis Lake proposal appears to indicate a welcome change of policy in that regard.

Cancelling Himself Out

MR. LESTER PEARSON speaks more freely on foreign affairs since he ceased being external affairs minister, now having no responsibility for the courses he advocates. He does hit a nail on the head nevertheless when he says there can be no effective disarmament if Red China is not a party to the forthcoming disarmament talks, to which it has not been invited.

Communist China is currently beyond the pale but it is a powerfully armed nation and has military potential of ever increasing range. World peace would have to include the Peiping regime else it would not be on a world-wide scale, and obviously any important steps taken towards disarmament would have an Achilles heel if Communist China were not a signatory to them.

Mr. Pearson says however that

Red China should not be given a seat in the UN or recognized diplomatically. This is an anomaly not likely to induce Peiping to agree to any disarmament, and it cancels out his view that Red China should sit down at the arms talks. If Peiping is to be a partner to whittling down military weapons its participation in the general preservation of peace is equally important.

Red China is knocking at the doors of the UN and some day it will have to be admitted. It would seem logical also that as a member of the UN it would be constrained by that body to a degree impossible while the doors are kept shut in its face. The argument that Red China should disarm with others has as its corollary that it should share with others the overriding aims of peace implicit in membership in the UN organization.

Using New Technique

NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV'S performance in India indicates that he aims to bring inter-continental table-hopping to a new artistry.

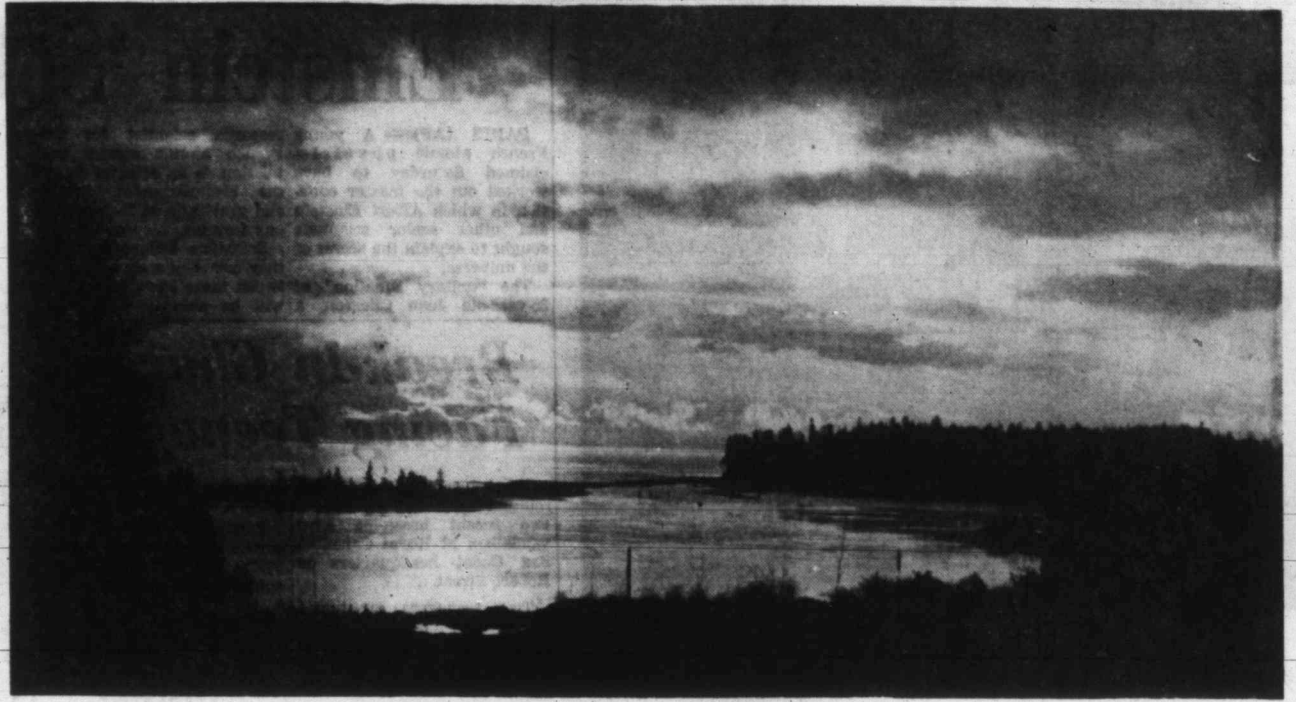

Khrushchev used the Indian Parliament as a platform to blast off about the plight of peoples—not in India—but in Africa and South America.

Ever since Khrushchev left Moscow the Communist propaganda machine has aimed its material not only at India and Indonesia—the area of the Russian premier's visit—but more significantly at Africa and Latin America.

The over-all plan is evident in Khrushchev's reference in his speech before the Indian Parliament to Cuba, where his lieutenant, Anastas Mikoyan, opened a Russian trade show.

Khrushchev apparently believes that his presence in the newly-independent Asiatic countries can be an opportunity for rallying around by the peoples of seething Africa and Latin America. He pictures the Soviet Union as the liberator, while Western nations seek to enslave underdeveloped countries.

"... of shoes—and ships—and sailing wax—of cabbages and kings."

AN AD showing salesman and tailor fussing round the customer's suit coat is a reminder of one of man's weakest moments. He stands on such occasions looking like a lost soul. Advice about lapels, cuffs, buttons, pours into his ear as though it were his first suit. He may have worn clothes for 40 years but he is treated as a sartorial novice.

The sad thing is that, posed in front of the shop mirror, he feels like one too. No, trying on a new suit is not one of man's brightest experiences.

A London Times exposition of the change of name for royal descendants indicates that if one is a prince one goes nameless. The prefix HRH makes a surname unnecessary. Prince Philip is the only member of the reigning family with a surname, that of Mountbatten, which he assumed on naturalization prior to his marriage. Before that, as a prince of the royal houses of Greece and Denmark, he had none. It is recorded that King George VI offered him the style and dignity of Royal Highness but he said he preferred a name. The dignity of HRH nevertheless followed shortly thereafter, so he acquired, both a surname and another princely title. Presumably he is the only royal figure with this unusual distinction.

The difference between the spoken and the written word was never better revealed than by television. Advertisers would shudder to put in print some of the statements voiced on their behalf on TV, where quite obviously anything goes if it will sell a product. How it does that is a mystery, for some spiels are pure drivel that insult the intelligence of the video watcher. But this is the brain-washing age and I suppose even drivel gets driven home by constant repetition.

There are many links between Canada and Britain but in particular one has been forged strongly in the postwar years—the number of Canadians making their home there. No fewer than 60,000 persons of Canadian origin now work, play and have their being in the United Kingdom. Roughly 100,000 more cross the Atlantic annually on vacation trips. This country and its types are thus well-known in the Old Land, as becomes apparent when unasked hot-water bottles are placed between the blankets for the comfort of visiting Canadians.

Milady, they say, although never having "a thing to wear," has a closet full of garments. But what about her spouse and his ties? There will be scarce a man who doesn't have up to a score of ties and most of them hanging limp and unused. The average collection is also amply varied, even if it represents Christmas gifts because few men buy ties of their own accord. There are gay ties, grave ties, fancy-colored and penny plain, but morning after morn the same tie—or at best a single alternative—is wrapped around the male neck. What inhibition makes him cling to but one or two favorites?

The groundhog or the weatherman may be no real guide to Spring, but the sports tables are. These show that the ice hockey season is in its last stretch and that the playoff series will soon be here. Championship games of a winter pastime are a harbinger of sunny days and sunny skies to come, something that must please hockey players as well as gardeners. For them the long winter grind is nearly over; one last sustained effort and they will be free. This is the crucial period, however; the dust before the palm. May the Cougars crown it with victorious endeavor.

Growth of Understanding

Beautiful Flowers from Evil Seed

By RICHARD L. THOMAS, from London

NO one seems to be certain that the international outbreak of anti-semitism was an organized affair. Obviously there was a basic organization—the initial dabbling of swastikas was carefully planned and precision timed. But after that it seems probable that it was an imitative reaction by irresponsible hooligans—the same people who a few months ago were scribbling "Niggers Go Home" in Notting Hill.

Whether it was organized or not on an international scale the reaction in Britain has been significant. Far from stirring up race hatred the ultimate result seems to be the reverse—it has succeeded in bringing Jew and gentile closer together. It has certainly aroused horror and contempt, and many Christian churches have been at pains to emphasize the evil latent in so many people.

The other day I was talking with Rabbi Bernard Landau, who is minister of the Hebrew congregation at Margate. "It is so difficult," he said, "You see there is nothing we can do about it." And if ever a man spoke from the depths of his soul he did. His mother and father and two brothers were Hitler's victims. His wife's mother and father perished in a concentration camp.

In fact a way has been found—thanks to the awakening of the Christian conscience. In many parts of the country the Christian churches have been inviting rabbis to address meetings—and the rabbis have responded.

The result has been a closer understanding of the Jewish problem.

And in proportion to their numbers the Jews have given more to art, literature, science and medicine than any other race on earth. They work, save and look after their own and so arouse the jealousy of those inclined to laziness, improvidence and selfishness.

Of course they are "different." The Jewish child in school stays away from prayers and he goes to church on Saturdays. He learns Hebrew. Usually, because he has had it instilled in him at home that the whole Jewish race will be judged by his standard of behavior, he is more studious, more restrained, much less prone to breaches of discipline. He tends to become known as a "good boy" and good boys are not generally popular in school—but there is little doubt that there are more "good" Jewish boys than gentiles. Actually statistics prove it. Again in proportion to population there are fewer Jewish delinquents than in any other religious or ethnical group.

True, when a Jew does go off the rails it is usually in a big way. So he gets plenty of publicity—and because he is different everyone knows about it. He takes the oath by putting on his hat and the world does not take kindly to anything seemingly unorthodox.

TAXLESS, police-less Lundy Island, the half-mile by three-mile slab of tree-bare granite 25 miles off Britain's southwest coast, should become part of Devon, say the county's government officials.

If it does, the semi-independent island's dozen-odd population would officially become part of the United Kingdom, pay income taxes, have compulsory education, be denied the use of their lone pub during certain hours, and be kept in order by police. They'd also get such advantages as electricity, water mains, modern sewage and garbage disposal, fire protection, and telephones.

The Hon. J. W. Fordham Johnson, lieutenant-governor, opened the second session of British Columbia's 18th legislature. A 40-knot gale beat on the walls of the legislative buildings as he delivered a speech from the throne that contained no surprises.

ONE hundred and fifty-six people died when the French steamer General Chanzy was wrecked on reefs near the Island of Majorca, in the Mediterranean, 50 years ago. There was only one survivor.

Fifty were drowned when the British steamer Lima went ashore in Magellan Straits. Some 205 were rescued and brought to Santiago, Chile.

Lundy's owner, London-businessman Albion Harman, whose father bought the Bristol Channel island for £16,500, is still undecided about the idea. He likes the possibilities of agricultural subsidies for Lundy's farm of 400 sheep and other livestock, but would fight an attempt to curb drinking hours at the pub.

History enshrouds the origin of Lundy's special status. Undoubtedly severe weather conditions for part of the year which cut off the island from the mainland for weeks at a time have helped to perpetuate its special privileges.

FRASER River gold miners were being taxed to death, the British Colonist newspaper complained, 100 years ago.

Tax collectors at Yale and at Douglas at the head of Harrison Lake, the two gateways to mining country, had been ordered to collect a $5 tax on each mule-load of supplies, after March 1, 1860.

"From every point of view the tax is unjustifiable," the Colonist argued. Five hundred men at the gold diggings had to pay taxes that amounted to 100 per cent on flour, 125 per cent on barley, 25 per cent on bacon, 25 per cent on sugar and 125 per cent on beans.

The people below Yale and Douglas, being exempt from this taxation, were not carrying their fair share of the load.

The Packsack

OF GREGORY CLARK

THOSE squeals and teen-age cries of ecstasy that you often hear on radio and TV when youthful celebrities of the male sex appear on stage are available at $5 per squealer. In New York I met a gentleman—one of the charcoal grey-suited, opulent yeggs who are a familiar type to be found around all the best eating places in that great city paved with nickels and dimes (and everybody on their hands and knees or in any other posture necessary to grab all they can of the little tokens)—whose profession was celebrity agent.

There are many other features of his profession. But providing teen-age female squealers for male singing stars was the most enlightening.

"When Sinatra," he said, eliminating one of Sinatra's syllables, "first started up the celebrity ladder, his agent had a young cousin of his bring a squad of her school chums to a radio show to squeal. It was such a success that squealing became right away a regular gimmick of the profession. It isn't as easy as you might think to get these kids to come down to TV shows and stuff like that. It's the older women who are willing to stand in queues for hours for these free shows. Kids don't like it. Too impatient. We tried out older women's voices, but they were too hoarse. The way it is now, it's professional. I got a regular squad of squealers trained to the job. I pay them $5 an engagement, and I can bring out ten, twenty, thirty, whatever the celebrity calls for."

Aw, that spoils the whole illusion!

Canada's Flag

The Colonist of Feb. 11 contains a letter from R. Bonne, titled "Borrowed Flag," in which he advocates the adoption of what he is pleased to refer to as a distinctive Canadian flag, built around the maple leaf and without the Union Jack or symbol of any other country. His suggestion is in line with the resolution passed at the national convention of the Young Liberal Federation of Canada, and later endorsed by Mr. L. B. Pearson.

I am surprised that so many presumably intelligent people are devoting so much of their time and talents in seeking a new flag. I submit that we already have a flag of which all Canadians should be proud. Those who are opposed to the Red Ensign, and desire a new flag, are either sadly misinformed, or their opinions are based on prejudice.

The Red Ensign is a distinctive Canadian flag, having gradually grown, as it were, since the earliest days of our history. Is it necessary to remind those who are opposed to it that untold thousands of our bravest and noblest citizens have given their lives in defence of it; and an unwavering desire to preserve Canada and the Commonwealth as free and independent nations.

Other parts of the Commonwealth, such as Australia and New Zealand, consider it a great honor to have the Union Jack depicted in no uncertain manner on their national flags. The Jack also occupies an honored place on the flag of Hawaii.

Goad the Mighty

I am greatly surprised to be informed that despite the fact that our Social Credit government did pass a law two years ago giving the dental technicians the right to make and sell dentures, they have not yet completed the final technicalities.

If the CCF are as interested in the people of the working class as they profess to be, they might prove it right away by applying a goad to the "seats of the mighty."

I suggest to them that this subject has teeth in it, don't gum it up. (Goodness to Betsy, I punned it!)

PRESIDENT DE GAULLE ... lost the right

Facade Is Crumbling

By PHILIP SYKES
Telegram News Service

Political confusion in Paris and military censorship in Algiers have clouded the picture of the deep crisis there, but it is clear that the France of Charles de Gaulle is riven by divisions as perilous as any that has threatened that nation since the Third Republic was sold out in 1940.

The facade of unity so laboriously built and zealously believed in by de Gaulle crumbles. The cabinet split came because the key men in French politics were not behind de Gaulle—he has lost his political base in French conservatism.

When newspapers and minor politicians were trumpeting their solidarity behind de Gaulle, there was no word of approval from foxy-faced Georges Bidault, the man who built up the powerful Christian Democratic movement from his personal resistance movement links.

And in Algiers young rebel Pierre Lagallarde was boasting of moral backing from Bidault.

Bidault represents the post-war right in France—the soul of respectable Catholic conservatism.

The other right—that represented by senior Petain and his sycophants at Vichy—went out of currency with the war and, save on the lunatic fringe of fascism, has made no comeback.

When de Gaulle traded in the policy of supporting NATO for his personal brand of messianic nationalism, some of the French conservatives were hurt, Bidault among them.

Bidault has always been personally warm to de Gaulle. But on the question of Algeria, he has responded the way many big businessmen and many political conservatives have responded—the response that a typical British Conservative might make if the republican government of Ireland appeared to be winning approval in Downing Street for its claim that Ulster should be united with Eire under Dublin.

De Gaulle is a man of long vision. He sees that a repressive victory, bloodily bought, would be no victory at all for France in North Africa.

So he is prepared to talk independence with the Moslem leaders. But in doing so, he has misjudged the temper of the French right.

De Gaulle never underestimated the influence of the left in France—even during the "united" days of the resistance he was sensitive to every stratagem.

But it seems he has underestimated both the power and purpose of the right—of such men as Bidault.

To take the present division to its logical conclusion would

Reds Don't Call War Unthinkable

Here is a report, drawn from military writings, on the Russian view of a third world war.

By BEN BRICE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Ever since the cold war began in 1947, many in the West have assumed that a thermonuclear war is simply too horrible for anyone to contemplate.

Soviet military doctrine apparently accepts as a foregone conclusion: (1) There will be another major war and (2) It will embrace the use of thermonuclear weapons, bacteria, brain and nerve gases.

When Soviet or satellite military men write of future war they almost never say "if it comes," but say "when."

Inside the Pentagon headquarters of the United States defence department is a small group of linguists and scholars whose job is to translate and analyze masses of Russian military books and articles.

The question, "What is basic Russian military doctrine?" was put to one of this group. After consulting with his colleagues, he simply handed over without comment summary translations of certain Russian military publications.

One thing is clear at a first reading: The Soviet military does not accept the American concept of thermonuclear deterrence.

U.S. defences are currently predicated upon the belief that if the two great powers have the ability to destroy each other, neither will consider a course which amounts to suicide.

Further, the Soviet Union does not accept the theory, advanced chiefly by the U.S. Air Force, that a thermonuclear war will be over in a matter of days.

Nothing has been found so far to indicate that the Soviet military contemplates a retreat from Lenin's doctrine of "permanent revolution" and ultimate world conquest.

The analysts, however, are watching current Soviet military publications closely to see if the U.S. visit by Premier Khrushchev will soften the "when" approach to war to an "if."

Among the documents by Russian military men was one by a Col. Baz, which appeared in The Military Herald in 1958.

Baz writes: "The third world war will involve the whole territory of the earth, on land, in the air, on water and beneath it."

"Future war will be conducted not only by armed forces, but by all the population."

"The application of nuclear weapons and intercontinental ballistic missiles does not ensure the speedy defeat of the enemy, but will lead to a prolongation of the war."

"Victory depends upon the morale of the people."

Shelter Is the Way

Most Could Live

By RON COLLISTER
Telegram News Service

WASHINGTON—Practically everyone can survive nuclear devastation and no one need be the victim of its fallout.

The human body, by its own natural resources, can repair radiation damage over a period of time.

It can take up to 200 reentgens of radiation from a nuclear blast without any disabling sickness. That's about 700 times the natural absorption of the North American from cosmic rays, X-rays, etc.

These are some of the initial findings in a study being conducted by a subcommittee of the national committee on radiation protection and measurements.

They remove a great deal of terror in the prospect of nuclear attack and they are a complete vindication of the life-saving role of the fallout shelter.

How much is 200 reentgens? Dr. Lauriston S. Taylor, committee chairman, explains: "If you are unprotected in a fallout field during a nuclear explosion, you could get a dose of 4,000 reentgens, certainly a lethal dose."

"If you went indoors, you would cut that exposure down to a tenth, to about 400."

"And if you went into your basement, just an ordinary basement, you would halve it again, to 200."

"And with 200, you are going to live."

This emphasis on shelter as the way to save life in a nuclear attack has delighted Leo A. Hoegh, director of the Office of Civil Defence Mobilization.

MacPherson Funeral Tuesday

Funeral services for Thomas Wallace MacPherson, manager of Home Oil Distributors in Victoria for 30 years, will be held at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in McCall's funeral home.

Mr. MacPherson, born in Glasgow, died yesterday in Royal Jubilee Hospital. He came to Canada in 1920, settling first in Vancouver. A veteran of the First World War, he was past commanding officer of No. 6 Company of Fourteenth of Canada; and a member of Vancouver and Quadra Lodge No. 2, A.F. & A.M., Victoria Sales Executive Club and Uplands Golf Club.

He is survived by his widow, Agnes, at the residence, 2713 Dewdney; a brother in Los Angeles, and a brother and sister in Glasgow.

Housing Starts Leap Upward In District During January

A sharp increase in the number of housing starts in the Greater Victoria area is reported for January by Central Mortgage and Housing.

The total number of starts was 139, of which 114 were single units. These were distributed 81 in Saanich; 34 in Victoria; 13 in Esquimalt and 11 in Oak Bay.

In January 1959, there was only one start—a single unit in Saanich.

On the other hand the number of homes under construction at Jan. 31 was 804, against 1,033 at the same date in 1959.

THE BASIC WORRY

One enormous problem confronts Canada in the next decade according to J. Allan Taylor, president of Huron and Erie-Canada Trust.

It is export markets. Mr. Taylor told shareholders at the annual meeting that the shortages of the post-war years, our abundance of natural resources, our increased standard of living and a substantial — though artificial — premium on the Canadian dollar had obscured the fact that Canada must export to live.

"Our prosperity depends on our ability to meet international competition in the sale of raw materials and finished goods in world markets," he said.

Canada's indulgence in inflation and increased production costs are making the export problem more difficult. Mr. Taylor said we are pricing ourselves out of the market.

and in the whole Canadian picture nothing else was so important.

B.C. cabinet members and their deputies were presented in Victoria last week with copies of a timber construction manual designed to encourage and widen the uses of wood for all types of construction purposes.

In January 1959, there was only one start—a single unit in Saanich.

THE BASIC WORRY

One enormous problem confronts Canada in the next decade according to J. Allan Taylor, president of Huron and Erie-Canada Trust.

It is export markets. Mr. Taylor told shareholders at the annual meeting that the shortages of the post-war years, our abundance of natural resources, our increased standard of living and a substantial — though artificial — premium on the Canadian dollar had obscured the fact that Canada must export to live.

"Our prosperity depends on our ability to meet international competition in the sale of raw materials and finished goods in world markets," he said.

Canada's indulgence in inflation and increased production costs are making the export problem more difficult. Mr. Taylor said we are pricing ourselves out of the market.

One-in-Three Firms Plan 1960 Expansion

The big bad bogey of tight money doesn't seem to be scaring Canadian businessmen.

Findings of a nationwide survey of Canadian business revealed that despite difficult conditions in the money market, fully a third of the firms reporting planned major capital outlays over normal for plant expansion and improvements to their facilities.

The figures are the results of a coast to coast survey of more than 2,800 manufacturers, wholesalers, distributors and other members of The Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association Limited.

Nationally, the figures showed 84.7 per cent of the firms polled forecast overall increases in sales volume in Compiled by the Canadian Institute of Timber Construction, it is an all-Canadian production, and the only one of its kind in the world.

W. K. Nichols, president of CITC told government officials that since formation of the institute six years ago, it has achieved considerable success in its efforts to encourage the use of engineered timber.

The new CITC 360-page manual contains data on stresses and loads, design and detailing data; and technical information based on Canadian Standards Association specifications.

VICTORIA BYPASSED

The marked shrinkage in business at the Victoria Clearing House in 1960 continues to show in the weekly February figures.

The total for the week ended Feb. 11 was $8,414,484 against $9,396,056.

The decrease does not necessarily reflect the trend of current business in the city, because banks point out that they are increasingly using the Vancouver Clearing House for much of the cheque exchange that was hitherto carried out in the Victoria Clearing House.

Weyerhaeuser Record Output of the 14 lumber mills of the Weyerhaeuser Company reached a new high of 1,300,000 board feet in 1959. The giant Tacoma lumber firm also turned out a record amount of plywood.

Little Success in New Delhi

Khrushchev Isn't Joking

India-China Dispute Depresses Visitor

NEW DELHI (AP)—Soviet Premier Khrushchev flies to east central India today at the end of a three-day visit to New Delhi that so far apparently has been unfruitful.

Showing a little more bounce than he had in his first two days, the premier yesterday toured a 30,670-acre, Soviet-equipped farm at Suratgarh, 200 miles northwest of New Delhi. He told the farmers they did not know how to harvest mustard.

MYSTIC ART

He also spent an hour inspecting an exhibit of mystic impressionistic paintings by Svetoslav Roerich, whose parents fled the Soviet revolution 40 years ago. Khrushchev talked animatedly with Roerich and praised his work.

But throughout most of his visit Khrushchev has lacked the sparkle and bounce he often has shown. He has cracked few jokes and refrained from the flamboyant antics that so often mark his tours.

Khrushchev's manner led some observers to speculate that he is disappointed by the turnout of the crowds, which were little more than a fraction of those that applauded President Eisenhower last December.

Others theorized that Khrushchev is depressed by the deadlock between India and Red China over 50,000 disputed square miles on their frontiers. Many Indians hope Khrushchev might find a way out of the bitter quarrel.

The premier never once mentioned Red China publicly.

although no one doubts he and Nehru discussed the border issue at length. Some Indians have predicted that Khrushchev at least would persuade Nehru to meet with Premier Chou En-lai of Red China. But there has been nothing to indicate the border issue has been changed in any way.

Suspect

Remanded

David Duke, 1203 Blanshard, appeared in city police court yesterday facing a charge of breaking, entering and theft following an overnight break-in at Air Mist Cleaning Ltd., 928 Johnson.

He was remanded to Monday for plea.

An adding machine was reported missing in the break-in. An adjacent office at the same address, Saanich Freight Service Ltd., reported a theft of less than $10.

Entry to the freight office was apparently gained through the Air Mist shop, where a window was broken.

A rear door pane was found broken at Maguire's Drug Store, 414 Craigflower. However, there was no sign of entry, police said.

More than $130 worth of cigarettes and cash were stolen from a vending machine, and juke box during a third overnight break-in at the Skylark Cafe, 1817 Douglas.

Police said the cigarette machine was carried to the kitchen where it was broken open with a three-foot length of pipe and a wooden-handled knife sharpener. A rear door was forced open to gain entry.

Lucy Kappellmann, 1166 Yates, pleaded guilty to four counts of giving false statements of earnings when applying for unemployment insurance. She was fined $25.

has a large interest. In a deal arranged less than a year ago, this Company financed mining operations capable of producing space-age minerals such as Beryllium, Columbite, Tantalite, and Bismuth together with quantities of copper, manganese, lithium and tungsten.

Contracts with New York for the space-age metals and with Japan for copper have been arranged and shipments made, and a very recent contract completed to ship lithium to Italy. The beryllium shipment graded 1210 and the copper average is 20%.

An impending deal with a major Mining Company of worldwide repute for a large copper bearing group of claims seems, to the local board of directors, to demand that a Company representative be on the spot and for that reason, Mark Zabel is making the 20,000-mile round trip.

Hinges on Budget

Classes by TV Possible in Fall

By IAN STREET

Televised classes could be operating at S. J. Willis Junior High School this September if the $19,550 budget for the pilot project is approved by the department of education and Greater Victoria municipalities.

It is certain to merit considerable debate when representatives of the four municipalities meet Wednesday with Greater Victoria school trustees to thrash out the $7,902,429 budget for education in the coming year.

BASED ON RESEARCH

Decision on the part of trustees to go ahead with a program of televised classes, taken early this year, was based on research dating back to 1957, the bulk of it done by the board's director of curriculum and special services, Denis W. Brown.

Mr. Brown started the study while doing graduate work in Washington, D.C., in 1957, and the following year while on a business trip east he was authorized to visit Hagerstown, Maryland, where a five-year experimental program of televised lessons is nearing completion.

CLINCHED MATTER

Last fall he returned to Hagerstown, this time accompanied by Bernard C. Gillie, principal of S. J. Willis Junior High. Their final reports, submitted individually, clinched the matter as far as trustees were concerned.

Mr. Brown said: "It seems to me that it is logical we should provide in our education system the best tools to do the best job. Television gives every indication of being a very valuable tool in the classroom."

ADVANTAGES

"From a factual point of view, TV has definite advantages," said Mr. Brown. "There is no doubt in my mind that televised lessons are educationally expedient. Whether it is financially expedient, however, is a question that others must decide."

DENIS W. BROWN

... it is logical

He went back to Hagerstown determined to find answers to a number of problems: Had administrators and staff changed their attitude? Were statistics available on pupil growth? How were production problems tackled?

TEACHERS AFRAID

"I found teachers and officials alike were afraid televised lessons would cease when the experiment comes to an end in 1961," he said. "In half a dozen small, isolated schools, where there is no TV, they are clamoring for inclusion in the closed-circuit hook-up."

Studies completed recently show Hagerstown pupils, many with more than three years of televised lessons, are well above the national norm, with "significant growth among pupils who find a subject difficult."

SLOW LEARNER

The fact that educational TV has particular benefit for the slow learner, Mr. Brown pointed ed out, "could be translated into considerable financial savings" for the taxpayer.

"The average cost of sending a pupil to school in Greater Victoria is some $370 a year," he said. "If, by means of televised lessons, we could save a significant number of repeaters, perhaps half of those who fall in a class, savings would quickly mount."

JUNIOR HIGH

Administrative problems, mainly problems in time-tableing, resulted in the choice of a junior high school for the start of the experiment in Victoria, and S. J. Willis was chosen because of its available facilities and central location.

"We felt that the degree of specialization reached by students in senior high school would complicate matters," said Mr. Brown. "It would be easier to expand the TV program from junior to senior high schools."

MUCH EASIER

"Another problem was faced in the elementary schools where pupils stay with their home-room teachers. It will be much easier to timetable for TV lessons where students change classes, starting in the junior high schools."

A TV studio would be located in a room made available on the roof of S. J. Willis school. Students in Grades 7 and 8, for a start, would probably occupy four nearby classrooms. Each class would average 33 students and would be fitted with a single TV receiver connected by coaxial cable to the studio.

SOCIAL STUDIES

They probably would take televised lessons in science, mathematics and possibly social studies as well.

School board estimates contain an amount of $14,000—a "generous figure"—to cover cost of equipment—for two cameras, a control panel with audio amplifiers, microphones, cables and other equipment.

This figure will cover cost of equipping cameras with motorized lenses so that one qualified engineer-technician would be able to operate all equipment from the control panel.

ALL WE NEED

"This is all the basic equipment we need," said Mr. Brown. "It could be used at some future date to transmit programs over a closed circuit linking several schools."

All televised lessons would be delivered live. The lessons would be prepared by a committee of teachers and delivered by a studio teacher while teachers in the classrooms watch critically. The result, it is expected, will be model lessons delivered after much preparation and polishing, an "in service" training for all teachers.

"Although it is planned for S. J. Willis school in the beginning," said Mr. Brown, "this is a Greater Victoria schools project. It is not intended to begin and end in one school. It will eventually, we hope, be in effect in all schools."

'Patronage' Charge Hurlled By Angry Island Farmer

Brash Youth In Trouble

ORILLIA, Ont. (CP)—Police complied when they received a letter from a youth asking for a recommendation that was required before he could join the navy in Halifax.

But the recommendation was sent to Halifax police. It suggested the youth be arrested as Orillia police were looking for him in connection with a theft charge.

A Ladysmith potato grower who has charged that B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board elections are staged without a secret ballot launched an attack last night on the board's accounting practices.

George Wyndlow, who said he will try to unseat the board's Vancouver Island member, Don Wilson of Ladysmith, at an election next April if the government will guarantee a secret ballot, levelled a new barrage of charges highlighted by an accusation of "patronage."

An agency of the board collects assessments from all registered growers, he said, then distributes "patronage dividends" from the assessments to members of a cooperative.

Women, Girl Struck At Street-Crossing

Two women and a two-year-old girl knocked off the pavement by a car, while crossing a city street about 10:30 last night, were taken to hospital for treatment.

Mrs. Neuy You Young, 32, of 6191 Chatham, suffering a bruised hip, was treated at St. Joseph's Hospital. Mrs.

Shirley Zen Lee, same address, suffering a cut lip, and her daughter Susan, apparently uninjured, were treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Police said the women were walking eastward in the crosswalk at Government and Herald when they were hit by a car driven on Government by Sardara Singh, 743 Market. A drizzling rain was falling at the time.

Mrs. Lee was carrying her two-year-old daughter when the accident occurred.

Critic Misinformed Says Chatterton

Reeve George Chatterton said yesterday a councillor in neighboring Central Saanich was "misinformed" about the Saanich building bylaw.

Coun. P. F. Grafton this week told Central Saanich council the building bylaw will make Saanich a district of slums in a few years and he went on to quote minimum lot sizes to back up his contention.

"Firstly," said Reeve Chatterton, "he has been misinformed. Our bylaw permits sewer lots as small as 6,000 square feet, not 3,000 square feet as Mr. Grafton claims. Our sewer lots are a minimum of 8,400 square feet, not 7,000 square feet, and lots with no municipal water supply are kept to a minimum of 16,000 square feet."

"Secondly, small lots don't necessarily mean slum conditions will result," said Mr. Chatterton.

out that in many coastal areas within the municipality the regulation minimum size for lots is even larger than the figures quoted. He said an example was Ten Mile Point, where the minimum is half an acre.

"Nevertheless," said Mr. Chatterton, "it is small-lot developments which make it possible for the average homeowner to pay for adequate services, good streets, sidewalks, lighting, drains, and all the rest."

Mr. Chatterton said if large frontage lots such as those in the Uplands were the rule, the average homeowner wouldn't be able to afford these services.

But the reeve also said Coun. Grafton's plea for retention of the minimum lot size of 9,000 square feet, subsequently adopted by Central Saanich council, was a good thing. "I say more power to him."

'God Will Help Me, Mommy' Says Dying Boy

WILLIAMSFORD, Ont. (CP)—Dennis Mountain, 10, who is beyond the help of doctors, says he is convinced God will cure him of the bone cancer which threatens his life.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Mountain, have refused doctors permission to ampu-tate the boy's cancerous right leg because they say the doctors couldn't assure them the amputation would end the cancer.

"If we had thought the operation would have ended the cancer, we would have let the doctors do it," they say.

Mr. and Mrs. Mountain four years ago stopped attending a nearby Pentecostal church to join four other families who meet every Sunday in a public school near their farm. Now, the family is conducting prayers night and day for the boy's recovery.

"We pray until we're prayed out," the mother said. Dennis weighs half as much as he did a year ago when he was stricken. He has not been able to get up from his bed for three months but joins in the prayers.

"God will heal me, Mommy," he said. Last May, doctors at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto diagnosed the boy's sickness as bone cancer and told the parents his right leg would have to be amputated at the hip. Now they say it is too late.

Mr. Mountain said he and his brother were both cured of a heart condition by prayer and prayer also cured the boy's grandfather of a self-diagnosed "stomach cancer."

The Mountains, who have prayed night and day, for eight months, have been joined by friends in neighboring towns. "People are praying all over," Mrs. Mountain said. "That's the only thing for him. There's nothing the doctors can do."

Thieves Follow School's Motto

CHELMSFORD, England (UPI)—School officials yesterday reported the theft of a sign bearing this motto of King Edward VI Grammar School: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—Get out your pencils, men, and see if the bride-to-be can pass this test. If she doesn't make a passing grade of 74, better look around some more.

The matrimonial rating sheet, worked out by University of Louisville Prof. John Scott Long, goes like this: Give the young lady 40 per cent for physical attractiveness.

Add 15 per cent for cooking ability. This means knowing the proper foods, not just how to dish 'em up.

Her skill with money is worth 15 per cent. "You make it, she spends it," says Dr. Long.

Sewing ability is good for five per cent, providing the girl hasn't skipped the critical lesson—buttonholing.

Count 15 per cent for health and 10 per cent for similarity of interests with yours—music, religion or stamp collecting.

Even if the girl passes, Dr. Long suggests bachelors should not marry until they're old enough.

The professor, director of an organization that hands out $200,000 a year in science scholarships, says early marriages robs the world of talented men.

"The supply of students is drying up," he said.

"Today's youth, before they've earned a dollar . . . think they're entitled to an automobile, a wife and a baby."

Brodies Bridesmaids Third Straight Time

By LARRY ROSE

Evcoes became Vancouver Island champions of the Province Cup knockout soccer tournament Saturday afternoon with a 3-2 win over a Brodies team that is rapidly becoming accustomed to a second-place finish.

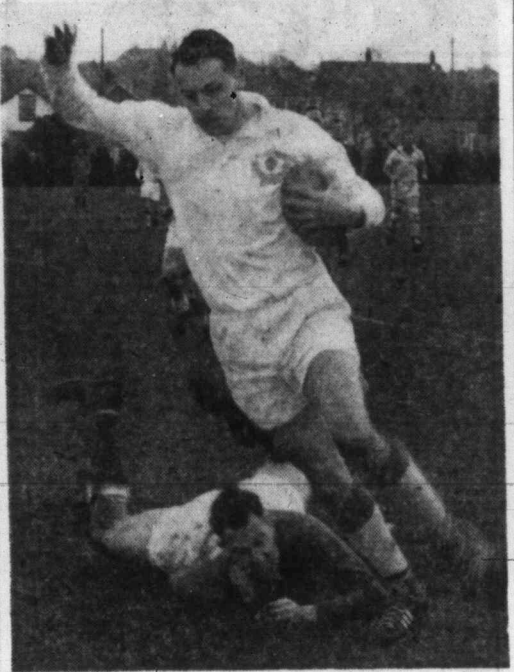

It was the third straight time Brodies have been defeated in a knockout final this season—a consistent record when you consider only three tournaments have been played to date.

However, Brodies came close to winning Saturday's final at Royal Athletic Park. Before 700 fans a late second-half rally by Brodies fell just short of its mark as Evcoes held on grimly to earn a shot at the title.

Trailing 3-1 with only 25 minutes remaining, Brodies cut the deficit in half when Hugh Pender scored his second goal and a minute later came within a whisker of equalizing.

Pender, a newly-acquired centre-forward who has inserted some life into Brodies' forward line, raced in quickly to head in a long free kick by George Paul and apparently tie the score. However, the

Both Lindsay and Davies turned in brilliant goallending efforts during the wide-open game. Davies came up with his top efforts in the final half as Brodies constantly directed the ball towards Pender, who was dangerous at every opening.

Evcoes now advance to the quarter-finals of the Province Cup. Expected to provide their opposition are New Westminster Royals.

FOUR TODAY

Meanwhile, four Victoria and District League games will be played today. All games begin at 2 p.m.

Canada's Scottish meet Kickers at Heywood Avenue Park; Victoria West tackles Esquimalt at Beacon Hill Park; George Hotel plays Saanich Thistles at Reynolds Road Park; and lowly Navy hosts Heaneys at HMCS Naden.

Leafs Catch Fire To Singe Wings, 7-1

Toronto-Maple Leafs shook off a dismal start Saturday night and threatened 16-year-old National Hockey League record with seven goals in the final period to trounce Detroit Red Wings, 7-1.

The unexpected scoring outburst enabled Toronto to strengthen its hold on second place. Toronto now holds a five-point lead over third-place Detroit but trails league-leading Montreal by 19 points.

Oddly enough, Detroit had set the existing record of eight goals in one period while whipping New York Rangers 15-0 on Jan. 23, 1944. These also came in the third period. Saturday's win gave Toronto one of its most spectacular victories of the season. Leafs trailed 1-0 entering the final period and were apparently getting nowhere fast.

CUT LOOSE

Leafs cut loose in the third. Dick Duff scored twice and raising his season total to 15 and Frank Mahovlich, Ron Stewart, Bob Baun, Bob Pulford and Gerry Ehman getting singles.

Detroit had grabbed an early lead at 1:48 of the opening period, Gary Aldern scoring the goal. Only fine work by Toronto goalie John Bower prevented Detroit from gaining a huge lead in the opening period.

The game marked the first appearance of Red Kelly against his former Detroit club and he drew applause for his rugged attack on a forward line with Ehman and Mahovlich. Kelly previously played defense.

Meanwhile, Boston Bruins upset Montreal 7-6 in a free-scoring game at Boston. The Bruins scored five times in the opening period and just managed to coast home ahead.

BRONCO SCORES TWO

Bronco Horvath led Boston with two goals, his 36th and 37th of the season as NHL leader. Horvath also had an assist to score six points ahead of Montreal's injured Jean Beliveau in the scoring race. Horvath has 72 points.

Other Boston scorers were Guy Gendron, also with two goals, Vic Stasiuk, Don McKenney and Jerry Toppazzini. McKenney also had two assists, giving him 40 for the season and making him Boston's finest play-maker in history. Milt Schmidt, Bruin coach, held the former mark of 39.

LEADS HABS

Ab McDonald led Montreal with three goals, giving him seven for the season, while Ralph Backstrom, Bernie Geoffrion and Doug Harvey scored one apiece.

The win moved Boston into fourth place, two points ahead of Chicago. Boston is only two points back of Detroit.

Alberni District Wins Tourney

Alberni District won the second annual Vancouver Island junior high basketball tournament held at Lansdowne by edging A. W. Neill, also of Alberni, 52-49, in the final held Saturday night.

The host Lansdowne team placed third in the tournament by defeating Belmont of Victoria, 21-11, in the Saturday night preliminary. Belmont placed fifth in final standings.

Other games played Saturday saw Tsolum place fourth by downing St. Louis College of Victoria, 32-27, and Cumberland defeat Lake Trail, 39-30.

St. Louis College placed sixth, Cumberland seventh and Lake Trail eighth as a result of the Saturday consolation-round games.

A crowd of approximately 300 saw John Gough, municipal inspector of schools, present the UBC Thunderbird trophy to the winning Alberni District team.

Tsolum was named the most sportsmanlike team in the tournament.

Leicester Upsets Hotspur; Snow, Slush Hamper Play

LONDON (UPI)—A heavy snow storm which swept most of England Saturday left the soccer fields a mixture of snow, ice and slush and accounted for several upsets and postponements.

Lowly Leicester scored the biggest upset of the day by beating first-division leader Tottenham, 2-1, on the Spurs' home ground which was a sea of mud and slush. Inside left Jimmy Walsh was Leicester's big hero, scoring in the first minute of play and at the 66th minute mark for the winner.

Wolverhampton took advantage of second-place Burnley's postponement at snow-covered Birmingham to move into a tie for the runner-up spot with a 2-0 victory over Everton. The Wolves gave a near-frozen crowd of 51,000 plenty to cheer about and made them forget their midweek 4-0 loss in a European cup match at Barcelona.

Sheffield Wednesday took over third place by scoring a 1-0 victory in ankle deep mud at Luton. The winning tally came on a goal-mouth scramble, which proved to be Sheffield Wednesday's only real good scoring opportunity.

Preston dropped back another notch into fourth place when Manchester United held the home side to a 1-1 tie.

Nottingham Forest scored an upset by holding Bolton to a 1-1 tie on its home grounds in a lackluster game, and Black-

The third annual Pacific Festival, Sept. 9 to 18, in San Francisco will be expanded this year into an "international" show although it will retain its emphasis on the nations in the Pacific.

A world talent search has been started for performers who have never been out of their native lands and these will be combined into a stage show twice daily in San Francisco's civic auditorium.

Festival chairman Albert E. Schlesinger said the 10-day celebration will open with a giant parade down Market Street with marching units, bands and elaborate floats representing participating nations.

City department stores display foreign handicrafts ranging from Thai silks and Venetian glass to Japanese dolls.

Biggest Bonfire On Earth

Residents of the Mediterranean port of Valencia, Spain, are getting ready for the biggest bonfire on earth, which will take place during their fiery festival "Fallas de San Jose" celebrated March 9 to 19.

An estimated 150 "fallas," hearths which take the form of floats or monuments and are topped by giant figures several stories high, are now being built in studios and warehouses throughout the city for the festival which honors St. Joseph, the patron saint of carpenters.

The fallas lampoon local and international events, personalities and any local interest from the price of rice to the latest trend in fashions.

At midnight March 19 all of Valencia will be aglow from the most novel bonfire on earth, while bands strike up frenzied music and firecrackers are exploded.

Foreign Cars, Horse Taxis

Kabul's a Contrast Of Palaces,hovels

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP)—Kabul is a strange mixture of tree-lined boulevards edged with open drainage ditches—and muddy bypaths through bazaars.

The contrasts are plentiful. Palaces in huge courtyards, luxuriously furnished villas behind drab walls each with its locked gate, hovels built into the sides of mountains that cut through the city, and modernistic new brick-and-concrete dwellings that give a million-dollar view of peaks that turn pink in the early morning sun.

SMART HOTEL
The smart-looking new Kabul Hotel, the modern offices of the Ariane Afghan Airlines next to the old Hotel Kabul, which houses a bazaar or two.

Quite a few foreign cars—and also picturesque, horse-drawn taxis. They're two-wheeled carts, driver facing forward and brandishing a whip around the ears of his scrawny beast, passenger facing to the rear, as in an Irish jaunting car.

MOTLEY LOAD
Government offices and a bank building that give only a hint of what we'll just call rather old-fashioned interiors. The post office, hidden behind a courtyard where a dozen buses, mostly Russian, take on a motley load of passengers, is old and dusty inside.

But a showroom with radios, phonographs, kitchen equipment and the like glows with a modern light in a corner of the modern two-story Kabul Hotel.

LIGHTED MINARET
There's a mosque whose minaret is lit at night and casts its beam toward the Kabul International Club in one direction, the Shari-Nau movie (where "Call Me Madam" was performed during President Eisenhower's recent visit) and toward the tiny fruit shops, meat stalls with carcasses hanging outside, and other shops.

The country's only railroad, well, railroad equipment: Two ancient steam engines given to Afghanistan by the late Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany. The train used to make miniature runs from the Parliament Building to the palaces in the centre of town. Now there's not even a track and the engines are kept as curiosity pieces.

as many as 1,000. Each team has a goal. A sheep's or a goat's carcass is the ball. Riders swoop down the field en masse, one man on a side, trying to seize the carcass and carry it to the goal. The opposition tries to ride him down, his teammates try to protect him. It can get pretty spirited.

MARCO POLO
Afghanistan has been off the beaten path since the original Aryans moved around the parts and Marco Polo dallied along the route of silk.

Despite the barbaric beauty of the countryside, which may mean cash in the pocket to the Afghan tourist bureau some day, officials here are realistic about present tourist possibilities.

"Frankly," says S. K. Rishiya, president of the government press bureau, "tourist travel in Afghanistan now would be pretty rugged."

Flying Down to Rio -13 Hours by Jets

By NEIL MacDOUGALL

RIO DE JANEIRO (TNS)—Now it's easy to fly down to Rio for two weeks with VARIG Airlines' recently-opened jet service between New York and Brazil.

Their Caravelles clip the flying time to 13 hours. Although I had flown in jets half a dozen times, I was unprepared for the quiet of the Caravelle. Except at take-off or in the washrooms, its Rolls-Royce engines sound like distant waterfalls.

VARIG's French chefs have concocted a six-page menu, which is a gastronomic tour de force. At 500 miles per hour you're half way to Nassau before you've savored the hors d'oeuvres, and nicely in Trinidad by the time you've finished your tournedos or pheasant.

MUDDY, PLACID

The menu and the food became such a preoccupation that one hardly remembered to look at the Amazon. Muddy and placid it was a poor substitute for boyhood dreams. We refuelled at Belem, a trading centre nearby which is hacked from the jungle. A U.S. Army plane in Arctic camouflage seemed a bit out of place.

Owned by 4,200 employees, VARIG was started in 1927 by Brazilian businessman of Germanic descent and precision training. It stands for S. A. Empresa de Viação Aérea Rio Grandense. The line has 56 aircraft.

LOTS OF HELP

Brazilians must be among the least-known, but friendliest people. I found later that I had only to look perplexed, and someone would offer to guide me.

Aboard the plane a Brazilian executive explained another reason why more tourists are going to Brazil. In the three weeks he had been away from home, the number of cruzeiros you could buy with a dollar had increased 10 per cent. Consequently a double room at the best hotels costs only $6 to $8.

STOP AT ACTION

During the last leg of the flight the two men behind me decided to learn English by going through a dictionary, starting with "A." They gave up on reaching "action."

Thirteen hours after leaving

New York, our Caravelle sited into Rio de Janeiro's Galeao airport. In less than a day we'd changed not only weather but seasons. For it was summer in Brazil. Sugar Loaf, the statue of Christ on Corcovado and the glorious mountains around the bay were more beautiful than we'd imagined.

Brazilians say that God made the world in seven days and spent five of them in Rio. I won't be surprised if you want to spend more.

Buying Is Booming

Vanishing Person —The House-Renter—

There's a vanishing Canadian on the real estate scene—the man who rents a house, particularly an attached house. If you live in a house, the chances are you own it or are buying it; and if you pay rent, the odds are just over four to one you live in an apartment or flat.

Let's Decorate

Room Gift Satisfies A Splurging Urge

By BETTIE BRADLEY
A friend of mine arrived at my house triumphantly carrying a box. She was on the way home with a gift for her living room.

It sounds pretty silly—but she rarely bought anything for her home that she didn't really need—and so she splurged on something extra.

While she was window-shopping, she discovered a wealth of pretty, new and often practical accessories. Some are Canadian-made, some are imported, and many are remarkably inexpensive.

PRETTY BOXES

Pamper your home with a new accessory. From India, Canada is importing pretty boxes—both wood and brass. The larger ones are useful as sewing baskets. The smaller ones can be used as cigarette boxes.

A handsome, leather loose-leaf book, possibly gold-tooled, would be an elegant neighbor for your telephone. And if you have a long-winded member of the family, there is a tiny clock on the market that attaches to the phone for timing calls.

DISPLAY MUGS

Our family loves mugs—and we are collecting unusual ones for coffee and hot chocolate. Because each one is different, they double as accessories on the open shelf in our breakfast room.

A tea caddy can be decorative as well as useful. I covet a caddy made of mahogany with brass hardware that would add a luxury touch to any kitchen.

An Italian wine bottle in colored glass is surprisingly inexpensive—and some of these are tall enough, and commanding enough, to stand on the floor. They add a nice touch to a vestibule, or they can highlight a dull corner of a hall or living room. You might fill them with water, just to keep your guests guessing.

SHEPHERD'S CUPS

Yugoslavia is exporting small hand-made accessories. I admired a small, carved fruit-wood vessel of a type once used by shepherds for drinking. This would be a conversation piece for the coffee table—and convenient to hold cigarettes or candy.

One of Canada's major department stores is showing an old-fashioned French cradle phone. These glamorous monstrosities—seen so often in French movies—are as charming as they are ridiculous. The only practical use of this continental conversation piece is that it can be used as an extension to your regular phone or as an intercom system.

of home construction since the end of the war, the once-popular attached house has lost favor with builders and public.

MORE BLOCKS

In its place now stands the apartment block. From a bare 500,000 apartments in 1941, this kind of living accommodation has shot up to 1,131,000 last year.

The single-attached house, which accounted for 338,000 of all Canada's homes in 1953, is now down to 278,000.

TWO CLASSES

In the course of this quiet revolution, Canada has become a nation divided sharply into two classes—the home-owners and the rent-payers.

Home-owners are on the increase, accounting for very nearly three-quarters of all Canada's dwelling units—2,913,000 of them in 1959 out of the total of 4,303,000 dwelling units in Canada.

INCHED UP

In comparison, the number of rent-payers has inched its way up by only a few thousand. There were 1,116,387 tenants occupying homes for rent in 1941—and now, after 18 years of growth, there are 1,390,000. The increase: a bare 250,000 tenants, out of 2,000,000 more housing units.

It's been a busy period for real estate men, obviously. And one comparison alone shows just how busy: there are more home-owners in Canada today than there were homes owned or rented put together 18 years ago.

Hapsburg Furniture Restored

VIENNA (UPI) — Restoration of the Austrian State furniture collection is keeping alive the splendor and tradition of the Hapsburg Empire in new Vienna.

The furniture agency, successor to the court furniture depots founded in 1750 during the reign of the Empress Maria Theresa, continues the collection and restoration of the invaluable pieces once housed in the royal palaces.

The collection suffered great damage during the last year of the Second World War, but many famous pieces have been repaired since the end of the occupation in 1951.

Keep Your House Happy And It Won't Be Haunted

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Tone down the voice and don't fling things when there's a disagreement in your house.

Otherwise, your dwelling—long after you're gone—may become a haunted house.

That ghostly view of haunting-prevention comes from Dr. Nandor Fodor, a New York psychoanalyst and author of "The Haunted Mind," a new book.

The 65-year-old expert has investigated reports of haunted houses and poltergeist goings-on in England and in the United States. Many times, he found the reports more imagined than real.

But sometimes, he swears, he's found a genuine haunted house. He's equally emphatic about some poltergeists causing objects to fly.

Dr. Fodor said that houses with a history of happy occupants have little chance of becoming haunted. The haunted houses, he's seen reportedly soaked up unpleasantness of former occupants.

Romans Ignore Valentine

ROME (CP)—Two St. Valentines have figured in the history of Rome, and the city has something of a reputation for romance. So one would expect Valentine's Day to be something special in Rome. But it isn't. Italians have never given the day any special attention.

'We Live Romance Every Day'

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—"Only one day of the year set aside as Valentine's Day! Preposterous!" says Italian matinee idol Rossano Brazzi.

"In Italy every day is Valentine's Day."

"That's the wonderful part about living in my country. You live with romance 365 days a year. Romance is in the air, in the atmosphere. The climate is charged with excitement. Life is always interesting there."

"However, this does not mean we are immoral."

CBC's Eye On Class In Britain

LONDON (CP)—The intricacies of the British class system are to be exposed to the critical eye of the Canadian television viewer.

Ronald Kelly, 30-year-old Vancouver producer and script writer, has been commissioned by the CBC to do a series of half-hour films portraying the three rungs of the class ladder—upper, middle and lower.

"It is an extremely interesting subject," he said. "Class consciousness in Britain is more deeply rooted than I had been led to believe. People at home told me it was dying out."

Although no definite date has been set to begin filming, the CBC has set an early September deadline.

PARIS (Special)—Paul Hindemith was in Paris to conduct the Lamoureux Orchestra in music by himself, Mozart and Beethoven. The stocky, 65-year-old composer was looking indestructibly youthful, agile and confident, his smooth head gleaming like a lighted globe atop his dapper black full-dress suit.

Young composers and conductors were there in droves to study the great man's ways and means.

From the beginning of the concert it was evident that Hindemith the conductor had spent most of his rehearsal time on the works of Hindemith the composer, giving his illustrious ancestors the short end of the baton.

The opening item was Beethoven's Great Fugue, opus 133, played in Beethoven's own string quartet instrumentation, but by the whole string section of the orchestra. The performance worked, but just adequately. The playing was laborious, the rhythms square, the dynamics obvious. The Mozart concert aria which followed was adorned by the exquisite singing of Teresa Stich-Randall, but the orchestra, though it did its job with professional smoothness, rose to something less than the height of the music.

In the six excerpts from Hindemith's song cycle, The Life of Mary (with Miss Stich-Randall again as soloist), we had music-making of an altogether different kind: infinitely careful and fastidious, close-wrought and particular.

Miss Stich-Randall scored a personal triumph. Her voice is smoky and luscious with a clear, silvery centre to it, like a gleaming thread sheathed in velvet. Her tuning is exact, her capabilities unquestionable.

Hindemith's Pittsburgh Symphony (premiered in its name city in 1959) completed the program. You might not expect much charm in a symphony called Pittsburgh, and certainly many of its more grandiose effects are stony and brutal, and parts of the last movement descend to blatant, cold vulgarity. But the sanity and practicality of its composer run through it like bracing winds, and the best sections of the first and second movements are not only superb sonic engineering but fine, civilized music besides.

Famed Arts Centre

Carnegie Hall Soon Torn Down

NEW YORK (UPI)—Carnegie Hall, North America's most famous concert hall, has lost its last reprieve.

Robert E. Simon Jr., president of Carnegie Hall Inc., says that he will begin demolition of the beloved complex of concert halls and studios sometime next summer to make way for a more profitable office or apartment building. He is already tearing down two adjoining family properties.

All attempts to save the edifice for musical posterity, including Simon's own efforts, have failed.

"Carnegie Hall was beloved, but no one loved it quite enough," said Simon, whose family owns controlling stock in the 69-year-old structure. "When it came right down to putting up hard cash, everyone was more interested in plans to build a new concert hall."

Simon's father bought Carnegie Hall from Andrew Carnegie's widow in 1925, with the intention of tearing it down as soon as a proposed new auditorium to house the New York Philharmonic was built. Nothing came of the new hall, so the Simons have kept antiquated Carnegie Hall running at a small profit ever since. They offered to sell it to the Philharmonic, the hall's chief tenant, for $5,000,000 in 1955, but the offer was refused.

Now the Philharmonic is committed to a new concert hall in the fabulous Lincoln Centre for Music and the Arts rising on Broadway 10 blocks north of Carnegie Hall. The $10,600,000 Philharmonic Hall will have 200 seats less than Carnegie, and acoustics of unpredictable quality.

Deprived of the prospect of rents from the orchestra, Simon was forced to plan more profitable development of the valuable block—through midtown property—before restrictive new zoning laws go into effect.

Funds to save Carnegie Hall, renowned for its near-perfect acoustics, have been set up, but their coffers are still empty.

With the demolition of Carnegie Hall, New York will lose 200 apartment-studios for musicians and artists—the high-ceilinged, skylighted kind that aren't being built any more.

Vatican Radio Is 29

ROME (UPI)—Vatican Radio, founded within the Vatican walls by Pope Pius XI, observed its 29th anniversary Friday at Santa Maria de Galeria, where it now occupies space nearly 10 times the size of Vatican City itself.

Construction of the transplanted station began in 1955 on a 1,038-acre plot and completed Oct. 27, 1957, at a cost of $2.4 million.

Operation and maintenance of the station, run by 20 Jesuit priests who speak 30 languages, costs about $480,000 a year.

LET'S TALK

By Rudolf Flesch

Everybody knows that novels aren't what they used to be, but few people know why. A recent Yale Review article by the British novelist Iris Murdoch offers an explanation.

According to Miss Murdoch, there are three kinds of novels: (1) the character novel, (2) the journalistic novel, and (3) the neurotic novel.

She defines the three types like this: The character novel is the classic type, as it was written by Dickens, Thackeray, Tolstoy, Balzac, Sir Walter Scott, Jane Austen and George Eliot. The simple secret of these great novels is that "they contain a number of different people." These people are free, have a character of their own and a tendency to run away from their author. Neither the author nor the reader knows beforehand what they're apt to.

Journalistic Novel

Next, we have the journalistic novel. This type is documentary and "offers a commentary on current institutions or one some matter out of history." The characters have no life of their own, but simply serve the purpose of stating what is essentially a piece of non-fiction.

Third, there is the neurotic or metaphysical novel. This one is "an attempt to work out the author's salvation by an exercise in self-discovery." Here the novel has become a diary or myth, which teaches the reader some metaphysical truth the author thinks he has discovered and must tell the world. Now, says Miss Murdoch, the trouble is that today nobody writes the character novel any more. We have only either journalistic epics or neurotic metaphysics. The latter—the neurotic books—are usually better from a literary point of view, but basically both types are inferior. There's no one around nowadays who writes novels like Thackeray or Dickens, giving the characters free rein to live their own natural lives.

Brilliant Analysis

I think Miss Murdoch's analysis is brilliant. Look through the current fiction bestseller list with her classification in mind, and you'll immediately see that "Exodus," "Hawaii" and "The Ugly American" are essentially journalistic, whereas "Poor No More," "The Cave" and "The Thirteenth Apostle" are obviously neurotic. And there isn't a single novel in sight that has a set of live, interesting characters that you'll remember long after you've finished the book.

I hope that before long somebody will come along and give us again a good old-fashioned novel—the kind you can lose yourself in for days and weeks. Journalism and neurosis leave me cold.

Subliminal Advertising

Too Mixed-Up to Sell

Tale of Cow and Hook Shows How Mind Works

By STANLEY MEISLER

WASHINGTON (AP)—A noise you hardly notice may enter your mind sometimes and, in a strange, transformed way, become part of your thoughts.

An experiment exploring this phenomenon was completed for the United States public health service recently by Dr. Fred Pine, a New York University psychologist.

His results could shed some light on subliminal advertising, the technique in which a slogan is flashed on a screen so quickly you do not realize you see it.

When this technique first received public notice it was assumed that if, for example, the slogan "see your dentist twice a year" were flashed, the unsuspecting audience would tend to do just that. But Pine's experiment indicates it is not that simple.

The slogan or noise seems to enter your mind. But it does not come out in conscious thoughts just the way it entered. In fact, images may pop up so different from the slogan or noise that only a psychologist could tell they were related. This would not do the advertiser much good.

In the case of the dentist slogan, flashing it would probably not send anyone off to have his teeth examined. But it might cause someone in the audience to dream later that he is a lion tamer staring at the gaping jaws of his animal.

In the experiment, Pine had 24 college students individually concentrate on reading a descriptive paragraph while some loud noise could be heard from the next room. The noise was a completely different paragraph read by a voice on a tape recorder.

One paragraph told about a cow, the other about a hook.

A sentence in the former, for example, said: "Lands where grass is lush and plentiful are the special home of the cow."

The other included sentences like this: "Coldness, hardness, silvery steel: these are the qualities of the hook."

Half the subjects concentrated on reading about the cow while the noise from the next room was about the hook. The other 12 read about the hook while the noise was about the cow.

Pine questioned the subjects later and found that no one recalled the sentences contained in the noise, but all remembered those sentences they concentrated on. So if the noise had entered their minds, it had done so unnoticed.

After the hook and cow readings, he asked the subjects to invent stories. By examining the stories, Pine could find out if the sentences about the hook and cow—coming in the form of noise—had influenced the thoughts of his subjects.

Here is what the psychologist found:

1. Students who heard the cow as noise tended to tell about relations among people that were warm, close and positive. Students who heard the hook as noise tended to tell about relations that were intruding, clashing and negative.

2. Students who heard the cow as noise often used children as characters in their stories. Students who heard the hook as noise would use adults.

3. The stories of students who heard the cow as noise contained such themes as sympathy, mother love and welfare benefits. The stories of students who heard the hook as noise were filled with phrases about such themes as death, aggression and activity.

On the other hand, the noise about the hook came out not as thoughts about the hook but about the related ideas of death, aggression and hardness.

The results are more remarkable when you consider that the people who heard the cow or hook as noise were concentrating on the opposite theme at the same time. A stimulus they hardly noticed had affected them more, at least indirectly, than the stimulus on which they had concentrated.

NBC Tells Paar It's Sorry; Censor Would Censor Again

... wants release

'Nothing Else I Can Do' Says Miffed Comedian

NEW YORK (AP)—Jack Paar, who quit his television show in a huff, disclosed Saturday night the National Broadcasting Company has written him a letter saying it is sorry it happened.

His agent called it an apology but Paar said "apology is a strong word."

But the comedian, who walked off his show last Thursday night after NBC censored out a five-minute anecdote Wednesday about a water closet, said he does not want to return to the Jack Paar Show.

SHORTER HOURS

He also denied reports he wanted more money. He did say, however, he would like to work fewer hours.

Paar said that if NBC would offer him his release now he would accept it. NBC officials said Paar's contract meant he would work for NBC or not work in television at all.

But Paar said he wanted to continue in television because "there's nothing else I can do."

ANNUAL INCOME

Paar said he earns between $100,000 and $200,000 a year, and denied with some heat reports that his income ran to $500,000.

Paar said NBC president Robert Kintner had offered to visit him Friday, but the comedian turned him down because his rambling home in suburban Bronxville was crowded with reporters and "I don't want to talk to Mr. Kintner in front of everyone else."

Paar said the letter from

NBC was delivered to his home Friday night.

Paar did not say who signed it, but he referred frequently to Kintner. He also mentioned NBC board chairman Robert W. Sarnoff, and discussing the letter several times used the word "they."

Neither Kintner, Sarnoff nor any other NBC official was available to comment.

But the man who cut the joke out of the program said Saturday he would do it again. Ernest Lee Jahncke Jr., head of the network's newly established department of standards and practices, said his decision was based solely on the question of good taste.

SHORT VACATION

Paar said he and his wife, Miriam, will leave next week on a short vacation. Earlier he said he planned to go to Europe, but found he couldn't get immediate passage.

Paar said he would probably meet Kintner and Sarnoff on his return.

NBC already announced the show will resume Monday, continuing under Paar's name with Hugh Downs, Paar's announcer, as MC. Downs, who has filled in for Paar on vacation occasionally, took over when the star took his walk Thursday night. Friday's show, as usual, was a repeat of an earlier program.

LOIS MARSHALL

Gift from Soviet Admirer

Two White Lilac Trees For Canadian Soprano

By JANE ARMSTRONG

LONDON (TNS)—Lois Marshall, Toronto's famous lyric soprano, hopes to find two white lilac trees from Russia flourishing in her garden when she gets home from her round-the-world tour next July.

The lilacs, four feet high, in full bloom and growing in pots, were from a Leningrad admirer and carried onto the stage after one of the two wildly received concerts which Miss Marshall with her teacher and accompanist, Weldon Kilburn, gave there. Soviet friends promised to ship the trees to Toronto.

"What fun to say there are Russian lilacs in my garden!" said Miss Marshall.

She and Mr. Kilburn are resting here after their three-week Russian concert tour during which Miss Marshall sang before 12,000 people.

Tickets to her seven performances in Moscow, Leningrad and Riga were sold out in a few hours. Now the Russians are begging her to return for two months to give 12 more concerts.

In Moscow she was invited to a "little party" with a few other singers. But on the night Miss Marshall had a cold and, with a concert the next day, she was forced to send her regrets.

IN HER HONOR

Only later did she learn that the "little party" was in her honor and to be attended by 500 people including many famous Soviet artists. And because Miss Marshall could not come, the whole thing was cancelled.

Such adulation can be exhausting. Miss Marshall admitted her Russian tour was rigorous.

"The concerts are so emotional. At the end I gave as many as eight encores. I could keep right on singing until two in the morning. It is so very tiring and also so very exciting that at the end Weldon and I were limp."

MARCH UP

"Russian audiences have ways of their own. During a concert they march up to the stage and lay down bits of paper bearing requests for songs. At the end of a performance they don't go home. Instead, they crowd the aisles and swarm up on the stage. They bring presents to the artist."

OUTSTANDING

There were three outstanding actors. James Dulmage gave a truly excellent characterization of H. C. Curry with smooth transitions, admirable technique and a complete understanding of the character itself and the most effective means of reproducing it.

Cliff Clark made a redoubtable Starbuck. Words flowed from him like the waters over the Malpas dam. This was precisely what was required of him, glibness and ostentation. But even more to his credit, he made the odd character of Starbuck human and intelligible.

'Rainmaker' Wins Full House Performance Standard High

By BERT BINNY

Victoria Theatre Guild production of Richard Nash's "The Rainmaker" opened last night before a full house at the Langham Court Theatre.

This is a sound, acceptable play which yesterday achieved a very high standard in performance; not, perhaps, the highest it has ever received nor yet the highest the Guild—in other plays—has ever attained.

Dorothea House directs "And This Was Odd" for St. Luke's Players March 10, 11 and 12. The players are Susan Gibson, Blossom Johnson, May Brooker, Peggy Small, Pauline Paulson, Pat Seale, Alec Hutchins, John Drea and Bob de Castro.

Victoria Choral Society has chosen Brahms' "Requiem" for its next recital in early April. The Musical Art Society presents Margaret Abbott June Gruber, Richard Proudman and the Victoria College Quartet Feb. 24 at Holyrood House.

Another consistently fine performance was provided by Alan Robertson as Fie. His particular brilliance lay in his ability to achieve the maximum expressiveness with the very minimum of ado.

While Gerald Guest as Noah Curry created a wonderfully definite character, his irritability persisted until it began to seem rather unnatural. The surliest among men sometimes relaxes.

SHARP SKETCH

Ralph Kendall's Jim Curry, occasionally overacted, was another sharp character sketch and Binkie Tisdall's Sheriff Thomas was always satisfactory.

Helen Peaker played Lizzie, the only female part. She worked hard throughout but Lizzie was a bit fuzzy. The character outline was never quite clear and, therefore, never quite convincing.

It was not, for example, the brilliant performance of Helen Peaker as Mrs. Levi in "The Matchmaker."

With the exception of some unfortunate maskings around the door at stage left and perhaps a little too much talking upstage, Victor Mitchell's direction was sensitive and efficient.

But the tempo of the play lacked variation. It had speed but more of what the musicians would call "rallentando" would have improved it.

SPEEDED UP

But, because it is hard to do otherwise, the cast had succeeded only in accelerating the tempo when they increased the volume of their voices. Rallentando was conspicuously infrequent.

The setting, decor and lighting were quite adequate. "The Rainmaker" may be seen any night next week with curtain time at 8.15.

Garden Notes

Spray in the Spring

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS
TO DESTROY BRACKEN (R.E.J., Saanichton)—The best way I know to get rid of bracken is to spray with downon in the spring when the new fronds have just unfurled and are fresh and green. As bracken is somewhat resistant, the downon should be mixed at half again the strength recommended on the package.

I should warn you that this chemical will also kill all the grasses it touches, and if the bracken is growing among desirable grasses, you will have to paint the weedkiller on the fronds, treating each one separately.

PRUNING BUDDLEIA (E. H. Victoria)—To prune Buddleia davidii, the Butterfly Bush, and its varieties, cut back the shoots of last year's growth which have borne flowers to within three buds of their point of origin. Count from the bottom of last year's shoot and make your cut immediately above the third bud or twig. This can be done anytime before the end of the month.

If this pruning encourages too many twiggy shoots to appear, you can thin these out in April, leaving only a few of the strongest. This should produce strong, arching shoots with long spikes of fragrant flowers.

If your Butterfly Bush hasn't been pruned at all for some years, better take out one-third of all growth right down to ground level now, and do the same each spring for three years, thereby rebuilding the whole bush.

PLANTING GARLIC (A.L.S., Cowichan Station)—It isn't necessary to send away to a catalogue seedman for garlic cloves to plant in your garden—the bulbs sold at the grocer's for flavoring will grow just as well.

Peel off the outer skin and separate the bulb into cloves, planting these two inches deep and six inches apart in late April. They like a light, rather sandy soil with a bit of peat moss and lime incorporated, and all the sun they can get.

MAIDENHAIR FERN (W.M.C., Victoria)—It is quite a common occurrence for a Maidenhair Fern to take a rest in the winter, with most of the fronds dying back. Leave your fern as it is, allowing the dead fronds to stay on, and maintain dormancy by giving only enough water to prevent the soil from turning dust-dry.

Along about the end of March you can knock the fern out of its pot and take a look at the roots. If obviously root-bound, you can split the clump and repot the pieces into a rich, well-drained woody soil mixture and water thoroughly by immersion. If the plants can be kept in a warm, moist atmosphere after repotting, so much the better.

SPRAY SPREADER (D.J.O.C., Victoria)—The soft soap, recommended in the older garden books is to make the various sprays spread over the foliage and stick better, and all sprays work better when some such substance is used to break the surface tension of the water.

Many of our modern ready-to-use sprays have a spreader incorporated, and there are proprietary materials solid which are much better than the old-fashioned soft soap. Later's Surf-factant and CIL Sticker-Spreader are both good, and at a pinch, any of the liquid dishwashing detergents can be used in moderation.

What Makes FM Run?

Those cynics—and they are legion—who insist nothing can be done about mass taste and mass media like radio and television and who only depress it further, might be heartened or at any rate confounded, by the steady growth of FM radio which has always made do with quality programming. The latest FM station in New York is WABC, which actually has been on the air for some years but only recently inaugurated an entirely separate programming from its sister AM station from 6 p.m. to midnight.

Is FM cheaper to run than AM? I asked. "Well," said Roger Coleman, head of the new FM system, "we don't have to pay disc jockeys. We just want an announcer who can pronounce Bach and Chopin." I think it's wonderful but puzzling that FM has always been associated with high quality, and I asked why. "What actually happened in the early days was that radio operators reduced the technical values of FM could be brought out better by good music. And as they programmed more and more good music they realized it was the only way they could compete with AM," said Coleman.

"Of the 2,500,000 FM sets here in New York, most belong to the age group 35 to 40 years old and in the $9,000 income group or over. About 51 per cent are professional men or college graduates. The level is very high. They actually use FM to recruit engineers, and they get good response."

"Our biggest listeners are dentists, and very critical, too," said Coleman. FM never lived up to its advance hopes. After the war it was supposed to outstrip AM, to provide variety in programming by providing more stations that would appeal to fringe groups. Nevertheless it has shown a slow steady growth and a very healthy one. The No. 1 radio station in Hollywood is now an FM station. FM is bigger in Chicago than it is in New York.

"Our schedule," said Coleman, "will go something like this: From 6 to 7 on Mondays, we'll have show time. We'll play the entire album of 'The Sound of Music'—'My Fair Lady' or 'Gigi' at 7 o'clock, news, Seven, fifteen to 8, light classics. Eight to 9 a masterworks hour, from 9 to 10, a program called 'Accent on Sound' which will do popular songs, folksongs and things like that. From 10 to 11 we'll do alternating shows, one night ballet theatre, next a concert with some singer or other artist such as Belafonte."

"The 10 o'clock period will vary throughout the week. One night piano concert, the next, new-release hour. We've found that 20 per cent of the audience plays piano, which makes it much more sensitive to new music. The 11.15 to 12 spot will also change each night. Monday some beautiful light music; Wednesday native music, the actual recordings of different countries; on Thursday night chamber music."

"We're even going to have an hour of Baroque music every week, and we already have a sponsor. We'll be doing progressive jazz for an hour on Saturdays from 11.15 to midnight. From 8 to 11 every Sunday we alternate each week between an opera and a play such as 'Hamlet' with Sir John Gielgud."

"Also, we'll be doing an hour of movie music from the soundtracks. An awful lot of good music has been written for sound tracks and then lost sight of."

Hollywood Today

By Sheilah Graham

Elvis Story on Broadway

HOLLYWOOD (NANA)—Isn't "Bye, Bye, Birdie," the musical comedy biography of Elvis Presley, due on Broadway in April with Birdie, a swivel-hipped, guitar-strumming singer?

There's money in "The Millionaire." This popular TV series produced by Don Fedderson is going into its sixth year.

Attention, Jackie Gleason: Sid Caesar has shed an enormous amount of weight and looks gorgeous.

Zsa Zsa Gabor is wearing a heart-shaped diamond ring from fiancé Sidney Barton that weighs some 20-odd carats. And there's nothing odd about that. Right now, the lovebirds are in Paris deciding on whether they should elope fast, or wait a prosaic six months.

Marjorie Steele is inviting buddies to "visit me in my chateau above the Corniche on the Riviera." Husband Huntington Hartford gave it to Marjorie as a 10th wedding anniversary token. A nice 10-bedroom token.

Useful to have the right connections: David Niven got his $15,000 Bentley Continental in Stockholm for $8,000 and a five-year guarantee, through relatives of wife Hjordis. Of course, it's nice to be able to have $8,000 to spend on a car in the first place.

Melvyn Douglas is holidaying in Mexico until the 14th. He reports next day for rehearsals in "The Best Man," in which he plays a presidential candidate, a demotion from his presidential role in "The Gang's All Here."

Jackie Gleason's "Gigot," which he sold to 20th Century-Fox, will be filmed in November with Jackie starred. The screen actors' impending strike closes all studios indefinitely.

Leslie Caron insists she will not be returning to Hollywood for another year. In fact, she told the Metro bosses that "The Subterraneans" is the end as far as she is concerned—unless she can make her films for them in England, living there with husband Peter Hall and their two children.

Something I didn't know until I read in the London Daily Mail: Hollywood comedian Joe E. Brown took Mike Frankovich—the runs Columbia Pictures in Europe—into his home when Mike was a teenage orphan, and raised him as his own son. Both Mike and wife Binnie Barnes call Joe "Pop."

Barry Sullivan writes: "Bette Davis and I travel 300 to 400 miles a day in station wagons for our 'World of Carl Sandburg' tour." Sounds rugged.

French star Yves Montand is learning English by the number method—records playing while he sleeps. But wife Simone Signoret insists on speaking French to him at breakfast.

When Joni James entertained 15,000 American troops in Frankfurt, the MC was our wiggling friend named in the lead item of this column, Elvis—his last job of this kind for Uncle Sam, probably.

Gregg Juarez was denied admittance when he tried to visit his baby Bianca and ex-wife heiress Bobo Sigrist in London. It was the third wedding anniversary of his marriage to Bobo, and Gregg thought the occasion merited a celebration. Wonder if he yearns for the old days in Hollywood when he was merely an actor and a bachelor?

Toronto Telemeter addicts are buying the gadget at the rate of 500 a week. After experimenting with $9,000, 000 on this form of pay TV, Paul MacNamara, one of the people behind it, tells me that Toronto will experiment with his brain child. If successful, you can bet other cities in Canada will follow suit. MacNamara is currently negotiating for good movies and good plays.

No Perch Too Precarious

'I Prefer to Look Down'

She Paints City From Above

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI)—Virginia Livingston goes to any height for the love of painting.

No perch is too precarious to restrain the grandmother's enthusiasm for capturing the essence of New York's symphony of concrete and steel.

"I prefer to look down at the city's big buildings rather than up at them," the artist said during an interview.

What she has seen from recent visits to lofty places is featured in her one-woman exhibition at the Museum of the City of New York, Seven of the 39 paintings—mostly city scenes—were bought on sight.

Prices ranged from $75 to $250. Ten years ago, with children grown and married, she picked from the top of Whitehall, up the brushes again.

Woolworth and RCA buildings. She has painted from a penthouse terrace during the coldest of days. To protect herself from the wind, the artist bundled herself in a chaise-longue cover.

When in hospital recently, she painted from a wheelchair through the windows of her choice.

"It wouldn't be fair to call me a young Grandma Moses," Mrs. Livingston said. "Grandma Moses started from scratch. I had a head-start."

The graying, impossibly-looking artist—fiftyish—gave up a career as a fashion illustrator for a newspaper syndicate in the 1920s. Marriage was the reason.

Ten years ago, with children grown and married, she picked from the top of Whitehall, up the brushes again.

"At the time," she said, "I wondered if I had any talent left from the old days."

In no time at all, the "talent" came back. "It took perseverance, hard work, study and determination then and still does," Mrs. Livingston said.

She recommends a similar course to any woman—fiftish—who considers starting up again in a career that was shelved decades ago when love came along.

In the fourth of her career, Mrs. Livingston is granted more than a passing grade among New York artists—numbering in the thousands.

The competition is brutal. Mrs. Livingston said.

There was pride in her voice when she told of having a backlog of commissions to do portraits do."

traits and city-scapes. She has so much in the way of "orders" that she knows she will be kept busy—and self-sufficient.

During the last few years, her paintings have been exhibited in the Salon de l'Art Libre in Paris, at the Corcoran and Smithsonian Galleries in Washington, D.C., and at the National Academy of Design.

She is represented in private collections throughout the United States.

"Painting just for fun is a wonderful way to chase boredom," Mrs. Livingston said.

"You don't know how much fun until you pick up the brushes. And you don't have to be a professional to enjoy it. In fact, if you're just a Sunday painter, you'll probably enjoy it more than the profes-

The Car Corner

Dart Bridges Gap

Small Dodge Has Charm of Own

By J. T. JONES

The new Dodge Dart is a kind of bridge between the compact cars and the former low-priced three-between the Chrysler Valiant and the Plymouth, to be exact.

It has a lot in common with what I've always called the "Plymouth" Dodges — made and sold in Canada and unheard-of in the U.S. — which were Plymouths with Dodge trim. The Dart is basically a Plymouth with a body all its own, and shorter and lighter than a Plymouth.

Dog's Hate Dies Hard

LONDON (UPI) — Psychiatrists pronounced Butch the bulldog cured yesterday. Butch made something of a splash three months ago when a magistrate ordered him executed. Butch hated other dogs. He had bitten dozens of neighborhood pets. His owner, Mrs. Constance Gamble, pleaded for another chance for Butch and the magistrate rejected, allowing Butch to enter London's canine defence league kennels for psychiatric treatment — to be cured or killed. Yesterday a league spokesman said Butch has been tamed and no longer hates other dogs. He now hates cats.

Desert Gives Up Wartime Victims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The desolate sands of a North African desert have yielded up the bodies of five members of the Lady Be Good bomber crew after nearly 17 years. Their four colleagues may be buried somewhere nearby.

High School Parley Set

Six Victoria and district high school students will be among 270 from across the province attending the annual B.C. high schools conference, Feb. 26 and 27, at the University of British Columbia.

The conference, organized 13 years ago to acquaint high school students with all aspects of university life, is sponsored by the UBC Alma Mater Society, the B.C. Teacher and Parent-Teacher Federation and the UBC administration.

Attending from this area are Leslie Underwood and Audrey MacDonald of Royal Oak High School; Lorna Boshier and Douglas Alexander of North Saanich High School, and Mary Boyle and Mary Nicolson of St. Ann's Academy.

The U.S. air force announced yesterday an oil exploration party found the bodies of five members of the crew that failed to return from a Second World War bombing mission over Italy on April 4, 1943. They lay about 85 miles from the spot where the Lady Be Good's almost intact frame was discovered by chance 10 months ago.

For weeks after the finding of the bomber, an intensive air and surface search was conducted for its crew. It was obvious the men either had walked away from the plane after it was forced down or had parachuted from it as it was heading back to its North African base.

Clustered near the bodies of the five were pieces of equipment they had used in their effort to walk out of the desert — canteens, flashlights, pieces of parachute silk and harness, furlined flight jackets.

REBUILT COVENTRY Coventry, industrial city now rebuilt after massive bomb damage in the Second World War, is almost exactly in England's centre.

Tension in the submarine must be very great. There is were a big seller among the California Kustom crowd.

But back to the Dart, and the part that's all its own. On rough roads, its unit-built body stands the gaff with very little shake, and promises to be solid for the car's life. Handling, as I said, is almost like the Plymouth's, and very good, too. Ditto the ride.

Inside, it's roomy and comfortable, having lost nothing in the shortening but a few inches of useless overhang.

As for power, the Dart has a tremendous range of choices — from the new canted six of Plymouth (a larger version of the Valiant engine) to the thundering big Dodge V-8.

Thus it can give good reasonable mileage in one form, and neck-snapping get-away in another. (And no one will know, as they draw alongside, which it is.)

The old "Plymouth" Dodge, formally called the export model, was born because Canada's DodgeDe Soto dealers needed a bread-and-butter car to compete with the low-priced three. I don't know the sales figures of the past, but I'm sure I've seen five little Dodges for every big one.

I've also seen a lot of letters to various automobile publications, along this line: "I saw a car in Buffalo with Ontario plates, and it was a Plymouth with a Dodge grille — what is it, please?"

These same grilles (like Meteor and Monarch grilles)

The Dart has a certain charm all its own, though. Being shorter it's a bit handier in traffic and parking. Being lighter it should be a bit livelier and better-handling (although I couldn't feel any marked improvement over Plymouth's already high standard) and, having its own style of dashboard, it has the edge on just about every car in the legibility of what instruments there are.

The Argentine navy said Saturday two mystery submarines now are hiding in remote Golfo Nuevo.

The navy announcement said one of the subs in the gulf apparently has been damaged by a bombardment from navy warships and aircraft.

The statement came at a time many Argentines were beginning to doubt there was any submarine at all in the remote gulf. There has been a 15-day hunt for an elusive underwater vessel supposed to be lurking in the 20 by 40-square-mile gulf 650 miles southwest of Buenos Aires.

A terse communique from the secretary of the navy said naval and air operations in the gulf are continuing and added: "The existence of two submarines in the gulf has been confirmed, one of them apparently damaged and the other apparently conserving all its operating conditions."

There was mounting speculation that the reported submarines might be Soviet.

William Lost His Bearings

SUNDERLAND, England (UPI)—William Moody made a mistake, a costly one.

Aboard ship, the 41-year-old merchant seaman brooded about the quarrel he had in port with his wife. "I will get a separation and another man," she had threatened.

In court yesterday, Moody's defence attorney said: "This is a case where jealousy ran riot."

Moody "ran riot" when he got back into port and headed straight for his flat.

His key didn't fit the lock. "I thought my wife had locked me out," Moody said. He broke in.

"When I got in and she was not there I lost my head and started to smash the place up," he said.

Moody smashed a table and

hammered chairs against the walls. He splintered the crockery and destroyed bric-a-brac.

He spotted a new washing machine. "I thought the wife's fancy man had bought the washing machine. That's why I smashed it," Moody said.

Moody finally rammed a fist through the wall mirror, cutting a wrist. He rambled off to a hospital.

Minutes later, the housewife came back to her shattered apartment. "I was so shocked when I saw my dream flat in ruins that I fainted," testified Mrs. Kathleen Burrell, 26.

Mrs. Burrell is Moody's next-door neighbor. The enraged Moody had confused the Burrell apartment for his own.

Moody was convicted of disorderly conduct and causing malicious damage, and fined $61.60.

"It was all a mistake," he said. Mrs. Moody said nothing.

Argentina Says

Second Sub Now Certain

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—The Argentine navy said Saturday two mystery submarines now are hiding in remote Golfo Nuevo.

The navy announcement said one of the subs in the gulf apparently has been damaged by a bombardment from navy warships and aircraft.

The statement came at a time many Argentines were beginning to doubt there was any submarine at all in the remote gulf. There has been a 15-day hunt for an elusive underwater vessel supposed

There was mounting speculation that the reported submarines might be Soviet.

Argentina regards the entrance of a submerged submarine in the gulf as an invasion of territorial waters.

Two Dutch warships, the destroyer Groningen and the frigate Van Amstel, and two Avenger anti-submarine aircraft reported from Curacao in the Dutch West Indies that a strange submarine may have been traced in that Caribbean area.

The Dutch said radar and anti-submarine detection apparatus had disclosed the presence of an unknown object Friday. A check showed the Dutch submarine Walrus in the area was too far away to have been involved.

The two U.S. military transports were expected late Saturday at a southern Argentine base, bringing the modern weapons for attack in Golfo Nuevo.

The Argentine government gave a rush order for the equipment, which includes depth charges, lights, sonar and other anti-submarine gear.

Argentine warships, patrol boats, seaplanes, fighters and helicopters have converged on the area. They are operating night and day to keep the submarine trapped inside the gulf, and hope to force it to come up and surrender or else destroy it.

"MOM" WHYTE ... no wild woman

Three B.C. Projects

'Mom' Whyte Plans Homes, Dude Ranch

SUMMERLAND, B.C. (CP)—Mrs. Bertha "Mom" Whyte announced Saturday that she and husband Robert plan a three-phase project in B.C.

The Whytes have taken over operation of the Mountain View Home for elderly citizens in this Okanagan Valley community on a three-year lease. They plan to build, in addition, an emergency home and children's summer camp on their property near Nelson "as soon as the snow goes."

DEVELOPMENT Mrs. Whyte also told reporters they will start a dude ranch in the Cariboo district. Plans for this venture are not completed yet.

Meanwhile, she said, she and Mr. Whyte would like to get acquainted with the people of Summerland and "let them get to know us better."

"People here have the idea that some wild woman from Borneo has come among them," Mrs. Whyte said with a smile.

Additional staff is still to come. Four or five of these will operate Mountain View, which has accommodation for 20 senior citizens. The rest of the Whyte staff will go to the Nelson project and the dude ranch.

LONG BATTLE Mrs. Whyte came to B.C. with members of her former staff after losing a lengthy battle with health authorities in the east.

Mrs. Whyte said she has a staff now of 11 persons, with their eight children, who accompanied her from Bowmanville.

'Unfortunate Thing' Kills Two Women

ST. CLOUD, Minn. (UPI)—Dr. L. G. Gross, an 85-year-old dentist, helped his wife into the family car, climbed in himself and put the car into reverse.

Then the car, with Gross clinging helplessly to the wheel, roared across the busy downtown intersection, missed a bus by inches, jumped the curb, ran down a group of shoppers, and plunged through a store window carrying two mortally injured women with it. Seven other persons were injured.

Gross, who escaped without a scratch, said: "The accelerator pedal stuck ... it was a terribly unfortunate thing."

New Calendar Idea

Thirty-One Days Hath September!

"Thirty-one days hath September, Jan., March, May, July, and November."

In Leap Year all the rest have 30.

In other years, old Feb. plays dirty.

And everybody knows it cheats, anyway."

Don't sneer. Children might be learning that little poem in school some day if a B.C.

man can get the world to adopt his new calendar. Should J. H. Caldwell of Crescent Beach have his way, "Thirty days hath September" will be passed.

Among other things, the "Excelsior" calendar will put New Year's eve on Dec. 21, give girls an extra day's husband-hunting each leap year.

Starting with January, months would have 31 and 30 days alternately. Except February, that is. February, always the non-conformist, has 29 days in regular years and 30 days each leap year.

Basis of his calendar is an attempt to quarter the year

Hold a Nation-Wide Design Competition For City Auditorium, Architects Urge

By TERRY HAMMOND

Victoria is entitled to an architecturally outstanding civic auditorium and the way to get it is by means of a nation-wide design competition.

That was the unanimous opinion of half a dozen city architects polled by the Colonist last night.

A seventh backed the idea of a competition but thought it should be restricted to B.C. architects.

They agreed that a truly outstanding design for the auditorium could set a new architectural pace in Victoria which would influence the aesthetic values of new construction for years to come.

They see the design of a new auditorium as a bright challenge which, if successfully met, would prove the artistic integrity of B.C.'s capital city.

And they pointed out that architectural competitions in Canada have recently produced fresh, sparkling designs for a new Winnipeg city hall and a Vancouver civic auditorium.

"Staging an architectural competition for our auditorium

JOHN DI CASTRI
... get the best

would be a terrific idea," said Peter Cotton, chairman of the Victoria chapter of the Architectural Association of B.C.

He said it "would settle all doubts" as to whether the city would be getting a good plan. The competition, he continued, should not be narrowed to purely B.C. architects.

"If a B.C. firm gets the job it should get it against competition."

B.C. architects stand a good chance of winning such a competition if their record in winning the Massey medals is any criterion, he said.

"We have a pretty good batting average out west," he added.

He pointed out that Victoria architect Charles E. Craig won the Massey gold medal for architecture in 1955 for his design of Kiwanis Village. Mr. Craig's design topped submissions of 800 other Canadian architects and won him what is considered the top award in the national architectural field.

Mr. Craig also favors a competition for the auditorium design, but points out that by extending qualification to architects outside the province most B.C. firms would probably not enter.

A competition, he said, "would provide a far better solution (to the auditorium design problem) than having it done by one firm or by a city hall architect."

Also warmly enthusiastic to the possibility of a competition for designing Victoria's proposed new auditorium was John Di Castri, who achieved notoriety here in 1957 when he termed the design of B.C.'s new

... not city staff

Government House on Rockland Avenue as "a half-million-dollar monument to bad taste—a perfect example of the prostitution of a great art."

Last night he said, "With a competition we are going to get the ideas of all the architects—we might well get something truly outstanding."

But he warned that the result of an architectural competition "is only as good as the jury which judges it."

He said the city would do well to pick jurors of undoubted architectural repute.

Importance of having a fine example of architecture in a Victoria auditorium cannot be overstressed, he stated.

"You have to realize that this building is going to be a centre of attention—it must be outstanding, it must be a real pace-setter—second best is just not good enough."

Robert W. Siddall said, "The results of architectural competitions held in Canada have justified this approach."

Of a competition for the city auditorium he said, "I would think that it should not be less than Canada-wide in scope."

"A competition offers the city a guarantee of a good job and a useful building."

The design of the building, he continued, "will inevitably influence" the integrity of future construction here.

He said the overall cost of the project would be increased by about one per cent if it was handled by competition as compared to simply awarding the design to a single firm.

The first-prize money, he

... much thought

said, is deductible from the design and supervision fee of the winning architect. The one per cent represents the cost of runners-up awards.

"If for lack of a competition we get a poor design, the architect's fee will have been of very little value."

He pointed out that the Winnipeg city hall competition drew more than 100 entries for a $15,000 first prize.

Patrick S. Birley, another Victoria architect who had outspoken views on Government House ("a good example of socialized architecture"), also favors a competition and said, "I would be very much opposed to the city's staff doing the design."

Role of the city's architectural staff should be to prepare the program from which competitors would proceed to design the structure, he said.

This would include a budget and general outline of the future functions of the building.

Walter W. Ekins said a competition is the logical approach to design of a municipal building.

"I am very much in favor of the idea—it could give the project a real shot-in-the-arm," C. Dexter Stockdill said he didn't think the slight additional cost of a competition should be a factor.

"By a competition we could be sure that a great deal of thought would go into the design," he said.

... terrific idea

He said his committee would "certainly consider" the possibility of a design competition. "And if the committee thinks there should be a competition there will be a competition," he stated.

He said previous city hall thinking was that the city's own staff would do the design.

"But we are starting with a fresh slate," he said of the committee which was appointed by Mayor Scurrah last month.

Food Gifts Just Fair But Money Came In

Donations of food weren't as good as usual, but a fine response of financial donations made yesterday's free food stall a success.

"We didn't have a thing left by 2.30," convener Mrs. E. E. Harper said last night. "If it hadn't been for the financial donations we wouldn't have gotten anywhere, but we were able to buy food, and everybody got something." Next food stall will be held March 12.

Saanich

A manhole at Government and Johnson where two B.C. Telephone Company employees were injured during a gas explosion Friday does not contain enough gas to cause another explosion, a B.C. Electric Company spokesman said last night.

The blast occurred shortly before noon. Presence of gas was "negligible" during subsequent tests made by the B.C. gas department at 4.30, 6 and 10.30 p.m. Friday and again at 8.30 a.m. yesterday, a spokesman said.

"There was a pocket of gas in there, but how it got there we still don't know," he said. It could have leaked there from a gas line during recent underground excavation nearby or it could have come from the ground or from a sewer, he said earlier.

Telephone workers Keith Ford, 3036 Jacklin, and Tom Walker, 69 Crease, both burned about the face and hands in the blast, last night were in satisfactory condition at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Saanich will only buy as much park land as it can afford over the next 15 years, but the total cost could well amount to more than $1,000,000, according to Reeve George Chatterton.

His statement came a few days after Councillor Harold Todd said he did not think the municipality would spend "anything like" the $1,328,900 park purchase sum outlined by Saanich planners as necessary from now until 1975.

ONLY HALF-MILL
Coun. Todd said Saanich should only spend its half-mill tax levy plus some revenue from sale of land.

Reeve Chatterton pointed out that if the municipality's assessment remained fixed over the next 15 years the half-mill would raise some $500,000. And if the assessment increased each year by the same amount it went up in 1960 the half-mill would yield about $750,000.

MORE THAN $1,000,000

With revenue from land sales the municipality might well spend more than $1,000,000 on park purchases, the reeve said.

But he pointed out that the park purchase blueprint prepared by the planning department was simply an outline of requirements based upon roughly estimated purchase costs.

IMPLEMENT IT

"Nobody has recommended that we simply implement it as it is," he said. "The purpose of the plan is to guide us in long-range provision of park areas."

Crippled Freighter

The Victoria tugboat Sudbury I is approaching the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait with another prize plucked from the stormy Pacific.

The veteran salvage vessel put a towline aboard the crippled Greek freighter Gloriana around noon yesterday, almost 24 hours sooner than expected.

FIRST POSITION

An Island Tug and Barge spokesman said last night the first position received here put the freighter, wallowing without a propeller, some 380 miles west of Cape Flattery.

Capt. Roy Blake, skipper of the Sudbury, reported he reached the helpless ship at about noon yesterday and gave his position as 230 miles off the cape.

The skipper reported to Island Tug and Barge Ltd. headquarters here that the Gloriana was drifting for two days at a rate of about three knots. This would have carried her the distance from her first reported position.

At last report, received here last night, Sudbury I was 200 miles off Cape Flattery and making six knots with her lumbering tow in a moderate swell.

SOMETIME MONDAY

The tug and tow are expected to pass through the strait sometime Monday bound for Seattle where the freighter was headed when she lost a propeller in a Pacific storm Thursday.

At the start of her race to aid the stricken freighter, Sudbury I was battling 60-mile-an-hour gales, but the weather moderated as she approached the Gloriana.

Kiwanis Club to Mark 40 Years of Service

Kiwanis Club of Victoria will celebrate 40 years of service at its regular meeting Tuesday at the Empress Hotel. Several of the oldest members in point of service will be honored at Tuesday's meeting.

The club has raised thousands of dollars for various charitable drives, among which are Kiwanis Village, the Tuberculosis Rehabilitation Centre at Royal Jubilee Hospital, and establishment of the junior safety patrol system.

Fingerprints Useless To Police

Detectives found two good sets of fingerprints on a safe which was opened overnight Monday at St. Joseph's Hospital, but it didn't help them solve the theft of $7,326 in cash and cheques.

Both sets belonged to hospital employees who were authorized to open the safe, police said last night. No glove prints were found either, suggesting that the culprit may have wiped clean the areas he touched during the daring robbery.

Trips Considered As 'Button' Prizes

Tourist trade group of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce will make an all-out effort to sell 20,000 Tourist Appreciation Week buttons this year with expense paid trips awaiting at least two button buyers.

A spokesman for the TAW committee said yesterday that trips to Honolulu and San Francisco are being considered as top prizes in a draw open to all who have purchased the distinctive lapel-pins. The buttons will sell for 25 cents each and the committee hopes to raise some $5,000 from their sale.

A tentative school-participation program in tourist week plans calls for essay contests in junior and senior high schools and, possibly, a poster contest.

Essay contests will probably start next week and all entries will have to be in by April 1. Prizes have not yet been determined.

Also to be a main feature of TAW promotion again this year will be a public questionnaire for which prizes will be awarded to top entrants.

The committee official said this year's question may be designed to elicit ideas for a single major Victoria tourist attraction.

Soak the Rich To Help Poor!

Water Rate Policy

Saanich council plans to play Robin Hood with 1960 water rates.

It will take from the "rich" and give to the "poor."

To meet higher wholesale water rates from the Greater Victoria water board the municipality is working out a new rate schedule which will lean harder on the large consumer; more gently on the small consumer. Reeve George Chatterton said last night.

He said Saanich comptroller John Tribe has been asked to prepare a new rate schedule which will meet the new wholesale charges without demanding much of an increase from nominal users.

"We plan to do away with the low rate in the upper consumption brackets—it was below cost even at the old rates," he said.

"We want to keep the minimum rate about the same as it was."

Oak Bay has already announced a new rate increase and Victoria is studying its present rate structure with a view to doing the same.

Esquimalt consumers will be tied to the Victoria rate because the city owns the Esquimalt water system.

Crash Hurts Four

Three sailors from Esquimalt and a pulp mill employee were taken to hospital following a two-car collision near the Chase River bridge south of Nanaimo yesterday.

Richard Haas, driver, and passenger Fred Werhun, both able seamen engineer mechanics, suffered minor injuries.

Another passenger, R. E. Dafee, also attached to the navy at Esquimalt, was in fair condition in Nanaimo General Hospital where he was treated for fractures of the leg, ankle and jaw.

Driver of the other car, George Oud, of Nanaimo, whose injuries were undetermined, was in fair condition.

Big Crowd Turns Out

IODE Celebrates Diamond Jubilee

Sixty years of existence of the IODE in Canada was marked yesterday with a busy day for all chapters.

Mrs. Frank Mackenzie Ross opened the Diamond Jubilee Jamboree in the morning, in the Sirocco Club.

Members of the IODE had worked hard before hand to provide cakes and cookies for the home cooking stall, and homemade candy and chocolates, neatly packaged and boxed. One stall groaned under jars of preserves with a section of newly-made marmalade.

Other stalls were filled with aprons, and another had a collection of white elephant articles.

A snack bar was in action all through the jamboree and tea was served in the afternoon.

CROWDS ATTEND

Crowds flocked to the all-day event and a fun-fair atmosphere was struck by the shouts of "barkers" inviting people to join the bingo games in progress.

A millinery fashion show, arranged by T. Eaton Co., was put on twice during the day.

In the display of lovely new spring hats, the passage of fashions was accented with four models lent by Mrs. P. B. Scurrah, dating from 1914 to 1929.

WEDDING HAT

Mrs. Scurrah's wedding hat, a fine black milan straw was crowned with an 18-inch ostrich plume standing straight up.

A Gainsborough model hat, reminiscent of many famous paintings, was the height of fashion in 1923. This straw-crowned model had a wide taffeta brim and ostrich pompons.

BOWS, ROSES

Bows and roses were the most marked trimmings on this year's smart pillbox and cloche-styled hats, and newest in shape were the jaunty sailor type, with turned-up brims.

Most startling hat in the collection was spread wings of a white dove centring a tiny black straw pillbox.

Ida Clarkson was co-ordinator of the millinery show and Jan Joslin, Ricky Nickells, Jimmy Crossley and Helen Blernes were the models.

Excitement was tense in the evening at the antique auction sale as Mr. Wilf Lund conducted the fast bidding.

Culmination of the day came at 10 p.m. with the drawing of the winning ticket for the lovely diamond ring which was raffled.

Philatelists' Officers

ca. Both Canadian couples are staying at the resort which stands in a 40-acre estate of lawns and gardens overlooking the panorama of the Blue Mountain range.

Candy Apple, Citron New Millinery Colors

Candy apple and citron are the appetizing names given to the latest colors for millinery's spring hats. This was revealed at the showing held yesterday in the Kirk Hall of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

The affair was sponsored by the Couples Club. Candy apple is a bright pink sometimes known as Italian pink and citron is just what the name implies.

Both wide and narrow brims, the Breton sailor and the high crowned cloche all seem to be in the front line millinery news.

French flowers and misty veiling are in the picture for after five. Flowers are not restricted to evening and they appear on both the large and small daytime creations.

Mrs. Mary Rawnsley was the commentator. She wore a smart black suit topped with a black pillbox swathed in net and net pom pom that Mrs. J. L. W. McLean said made her think of William Tell.

Models were Miss Lorraine Brand, Mrs. Betty Jonge, Mrs. Laura Miller, Mrs. W. G. Milne, Mrs. C. J. J. McLaughlan and Miss Margaret Strachan.

A valentine motif was carried out in the decorations and tea tables were centred with red and white flowers.

Mrs. G. Hodge was general convener and guests were received by Mrs. McLean and Mrs. Albert Wilson, president.

Mrs. Daryl Elford opened the affair and the vote of thanks was given by Mrs. Hodge.

Tea hostesses were Mrs. P. Boldt and Mrs. D. Munro. Mrs. A. Bell, Mrs. J. M. Ferguson, Mrs. Bill Fulton and Mrs. Jim McPherson poured tea.

Baton Twirler Popular 'Down Under'

New Zealand Beckons Victoria Girl

Baton-twirling your way to fame may be a little unusual but to Miss Claudia Spouse it was quite a natural thing.

After saving and planning for seven years to visit her uncle and aunt in New Zealand, Claudia left Victoria early in December.

She spent eight weeks "down under," and now, home again, is brimming over with enthusiasm about the country and the people.

Travelling by air both ways she had short stops in Fiji, Hawaii, Canton Island and Auckland.

Her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. W. Groom, who live in Rotorua, let it be known that Claudia was quite good at baton twirling.

So the visitor was asked to perform at a public function.

She created quite a sensation and her time filled up in a hurry. Claudia led the Hamilton Scottish-Pipe Band for two miles in the New Year's Day parade and made many other public appearances.

Newspapers carried front page stories and pictures, and this month she will appear on the covers of two New Zealand magazines.

It seems they haven't any baton twirlers in New Zealand. A drum majorette team was started a short time ago, based by guesswork on scenes from movies.

Quite naturally they were eager to have instruction from the young Victoria visitor.

In fact, everyone was so keen about her that she has been asked to return to teach the art. Also to open a charm school.

Claudia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andy Spouse, 1748 Emerson, has lived here all her life and she likes Victoria. It is going to be a hard decision whether she stays or goes back to the land of sunshine that is offering her such an opportunity. Tall—five feet, eight inches—golden almost red hair, a superb figure and photogenic features have failed to get Claudia into the modelling business here. It is something she would like to do very much and has done on several occasions in Seattle.

The forthright, outspoken young lady has very definite opinions about how nice the men are to girls in New Zealand.

She neither drinks nor smokes, which in the past has sometimes caused her to be called a square here. Not so in New Zealand.

"They seem to have more respect for women," she says. "And if you say you don't drink they just take it as a matter of course and offer to get you a lemonade."

The baton is not the only accomplishment of this versatile girl. She has studied ballet, tap and other dancing forms. Figure skating she loves and sometimes combines the baton twirling on ice.

"I used to stutter as a child so I concentrated on dancing and twirling so I wouldn't have to talk," she says. There is no trace left when this poised young woman speaks now.

She likes hand painting and embroidery. Italian cutwork without any knots was the way she learned from her aunt.

If that were not enough she designs and makes her own clothes, loves reading, collects books and records.

Drama and the theatre also attract her. Right now she is rehearsing the part of Mary Magdalene in "The Vigil," to be presented shortly by the Metropolitan United Church Fireside Group. She is secretary-treasurer of this young adult group.

Many Victorians Arrange Parties Prior to Popular Symphony Ball

Popular Function At Empress

The annual symphony ball is easily rated one of the most popular functions of the early spring season.

The formal affair which promises to be no exception this year will be held on Friday, Feb. 19 in the Crystal Ballroom of the Empress Hotel.

Going to the ball together will be Lt. Col. and Mrs. C. R. Boehm, Major and Mrs. K. S. Crabtree, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Barnes.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Howard McKay are entertaining at their Henderson Road home for Mr. and Mrs. R. Langdon, Mr. and Mrs. B. Bell, Mr. and Mrs. L. Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. E. Mallett and Mr. and Mrs. F. Sommer.

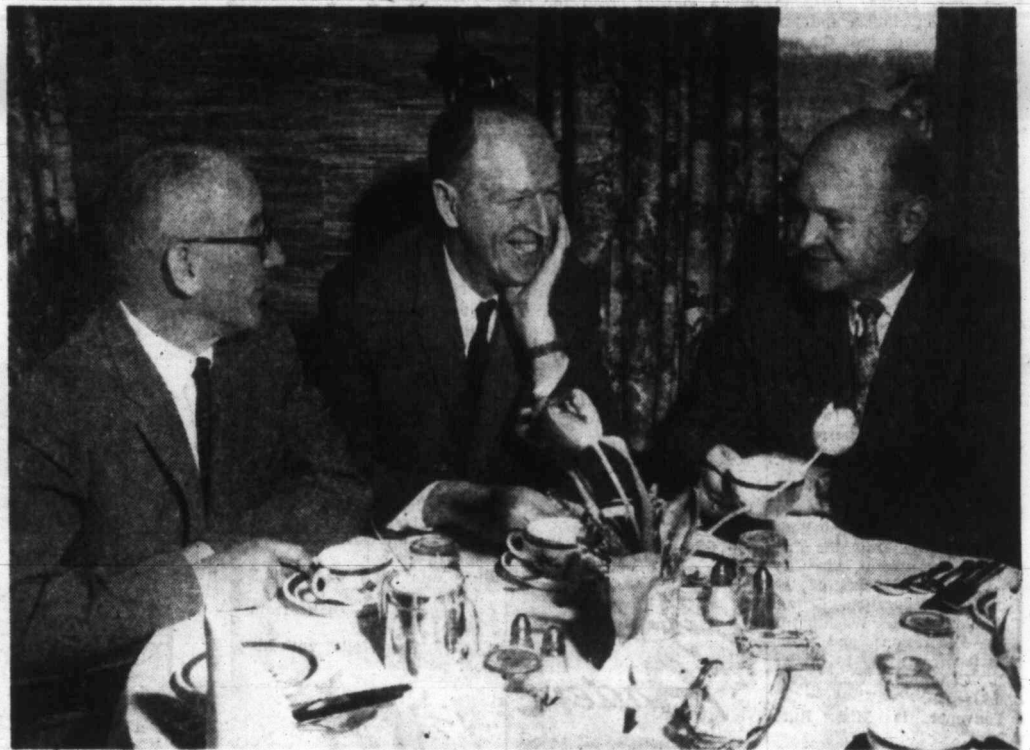

Many parties are being arranged in homes prior to hosts and guests going to the ball. Dr. and Mrs. L. N. Roberts, Telegraph Bay Road, have invited Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hind, Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wallace and Mr. and Mrs. N. Pittam.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin E. Pearlman, Uplands Road, will have as guests Col. and Mrs. A. D. Murdoch and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Melville.

Another party will be Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Lougher-Goodey, Mr. and Mrs. E. Goodall, Dr. J. H. Lewis, Miss Adele Gault, Mr. and Mrs. James H. K. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Lipscomb, Mr. John Gault, Miss Terry French and Mr. Alex. McBain.

Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Flahiff, Mr. and Mrs. Warren McWilliams, Mr. and Mrs. David Burr and Mr. and Mrs. George Nelson of Quilicum Beach will make up another group.

Photos of Dr. and Mrs. Whitley and Mr. Humphries by Harry Fillion; Miss Spouse by W. Bouche; and Dr. Hickman, Mr. Gilliland, Mr. L. J. Wallace and Mr. and Mrs. Laundry by Colonist photographer Bud Kinsman.

Mr. H. Gilliland, Dr. H. Hickman and Mr. L. J. Wallace hold a last minute discussion of ball plans over luncheon.

Mr. Arthur Laundry carefully chooses a corsage for his wife. Both are keen supporters of Symphony.

Mr. Denis Humphries picks up the telephone to make sure his tickets and table reservation are made in plenty of time.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: Please tell me what to do about my wife. We've been married two years and a good share of our joint earnings have gone to pay doctor bills.

My wife has a skin condition on her hands and arms which keeps her in constant agony. It started during our engagement. It responds to a new drug or a special lamp treatment for a while, then it gets bad again. She works in a library and wears elbow-length cotton gloves.

Last week my wife went to the top specialist in a large city. He told her the trouble was "nerves" and that unless she gets to the root of her problem she might have the eruption indefinitely.

This news made her so physically ill she had to go to bed. She claims the doctor is "crazy" and that an allergy is the real problem. She made me promise not to tell my mother or sister, both of whom she hates.

Why is she reacting so violently to the diagnosis and what can I do about it?—
UNHAPPY HUSBAND.

Dear Unhappy: She's reacting violently because she suspects the doctor is right and doesn't want to face up to the truth.

Many people have the mistaken notion that a virus infection, a broken bone or a case of typhoid fever is more respectable than an emotional problem.

Keep the faith and don't tell your family about the doctor's diagnosis but urge your wife to get psychiatric help. When she is able to determine what's getting "under her skin" she's likely to find that the skin will clear up.

Tired of Tweaking

Dear Ann: Maybe I'm getting old and crotchety but I'm getting darned sick and tired of having everyone who passes my desk in this office tap me on the head, snap my suspenders, pull my hair or tweak my cheek.

My desk is on the aisle. I'm a sitting duck for every nook-nick who passes. You seem to have a solution for everything from box-elder bugs to buggy elders who should be in their boxes. How about some help for me?—END MAN.

Dear End Man: I hope your letter was written in a fit of pique and that you don't honestly resent these friendly taps.

If the pedestrians who pass your desk didn't like you they'd ignore you. Psychologists tell us that touching, tweaking and tapping is a sign of affection.

Daughter Moved In

Dear Ann: Our daughter was divorced last year. She has a three-year-old son. When Linda (not her real name) left her husband she moved in with us "temporarily." She has made no effort to find a place of her own.

Linda gets a monthly cheque from her former husband, spends it on clothes and taxi cabs. She sleeps half the day and runs around all night. My wife has to stay home all the time to take care of the boy. She's not a well woman and being with a highstrung child constantly has made her nervous.

Our grocery bill has doubled and the landlady raised our rent when Linda and her child moved in. I hinted to Linda that things were tight but she has yet to pay a milk bill or buy a loaf of bread for the house. What can we do?—
PAST 60.

Dear Past 60: You can stop hinting and tell Linda she has 30 days to find a place of her own. Offer to help her pack and make it clear you mean business.

To learn the knack of feeling comfortable with the opposite sex, send for ANN LANDER'S booklet, "How to be Date Bait," enclosing with your request 20 cents in coin stamped envelope.

(Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

THE GREAT VAULT MYSTERY??
Last week, we asked readers to imagine what might be inside an old locked vault in one of our warehouses. Below is the winner and her winning prize. We are delivering a pretty prize to Mrs. Eli Marsh, 2312 McNeill Ave. Thank you, Mrs. Marsh.

Mr. Poet Man... I read with glee. Your delightful tale of the Great Mystery... It opened up visions of long ago. When our town was young, and the lights were low. A roaring bad man from across the line. Held up "The Wells" with his old car-bine.

Then headed north, & along the way. Heard of Victoria, so decided to pay. A visit to a town that sounded so British. Where men were men, and the horses skittish.

With saloons wide open, & gold in store. So who'd question the sight, of just one more. Deals were made, & ere time had flown. This swindling man, HAD A VAULT OF HIS OWN. Where he stashed inside his "Wells-Fargo" loot. But fate took a hand with a roo-ty-toot-toot. And our "hero" was found in an alley so dim. With nary a paper to identify him. So the years roll by and what-a-know? HUMBER'S take over the whole blooming show. And they come across, & make an assault. On this locked and massive aging vault. And asked us all by the morning "Star". To give our guess, "What's In That???" So when you blast, I think the lost cargo. Will be in there & belongs to WELLS-FARGO.

Freemantle-Williams

Vancouver Wedding Of Interest Here

A wedding of interest in Victoria, took place at St. Mary's Anglican Church, Vancouver, last night.

At a candlelight ceremony Carol Rose, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Williams of Vancouver exchanged vows with Mr. Ian Arthur Freemantle, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Freemantle of 3050 Glen Lake Road, Victoria.

The bride's floor-length gown of white organza was trimmed with pure silk embroidery. Her flowers were gardenias, pink rose buds and hyacinths.

Attendants, Mrs. Franklin Wiles and Miss Sandra Freemantle, wore identical gowns of cobalt blue taffeta with matching cummerbunds. They carried pink and white carnations.

Mr. Robert Loughton was best man with Mr. Darwin Cover and Mr. Franklin Wiles as ushers.

A reception was held afterwards at the Georgia Hotel. The newlyweds travel south for their honeymoon, the bride's going away outfit was a two-piece beige suit with chocolate accessories.

Mr. and Mrs. Freemantle will live in Vancouver.

Bonde-Thomson
Cheminus United Church was decorated with baskets of lilies, daffodils and acacia for the wedding of Sylvia Catherine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Thomson of North Cheminus, recently, to Mr. Karl Wayne Bonde, son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Bonde.

Rev. T. B. McMillan officiated and Miss Ruth Murrell played wedding music.

The bride wore a lace veil given by her grandmother in England and for something borrowed, her jewelry was a black diamond belonging to her mother.

The petite, dark-haired bride chose a waltz-length gown of white nylon and lace with fitted bodice and flounced skirt. The collar was embroidered with sequins and pearls. A tiara of gardenias and seed pearls held her veil and her bouquet of white gardenias and red rose buds was tied with streamers.

Miss Susan Bader of James Island acted as maid of honor.

Clothes Make Your Man

Dear Mr. Juster: You can say all you want about the continental style clothing that's being given so much publicity. Recently I bought my first Ivy type suit. For my money, I've never worn anything I liked better. From now on that's all I'm going to wear. They can quit making other styles as far as I'm concerned.—Geo. R.

What looks good on you may be "poison ivy" to others. People come in assorted heights and widths. Some of us overflow a bit. The important thing is to choose the model that does the most for our individual proportions. In your case it's evidently Ivy. For others it may be the natural shoulder, continental or trim-lounge model.

Dear Mr. Juster: Is it correct to wear those new ripple sole shoes in the office where I work? I find them very comfortable even though they look ugly as all get out. Some of my friends criticize me. I know they sound like a hissing radiator when I walk across the floor but I can't see anything wrong with them. Please decide.—John T.

A ripple sole shoe is great for golfing, taking long walks or relaxing at home. It's a casual shoe. For the office get a comfortable pair in moccasin, wing tip or plain toe style. These are trim looking and won't make you the centre of attraction every time you put your foot down.

Dear Mr. Juster: To settle an argument in our family, tell us if it's considered "sissy" for a man to shave under the arms as we women do? Our teenage son has a definite perspiration problem and he absolutely refuses to shave the hair under his arms regardless of my telling him that it would help eliminate this condition.—Mrs. L. W.

Substitute a scissor for a razor. Trim the hair short and have him use a good effective deodorant. This is the advice of a dermatologist with whom I discussed the question. Shaving might help this problem but could create another. Men's hair is coarser than women's. Constant shaving is apt to create an uncomfortable, stubby surface and irritate the skin.

Dear Mr. Juster: A friend of mine brought me an unusual shirt from Italy. I've never seen one like it. The collar is white and the rest of it's blue. Do you think it's all right to wear or would it be considered too extreme? I certainly don't want to be the subject of a lot of wisecracks.—C.F.

Your friend has good taste. This style with contrasting collar, and cuffs as well, is now being featured here. It has a smart continental air, is dressy and will give you a welcome change of pace. By all means, wear it occasionally to add a little extra dash to your outfit.

TIP FOR THE DAY

Hang On to Your Hat

Two hands are better than one when putting on your hat. Hold the brim in front with one and grasp the brim in the rear with the other. Then set it in place. It will keep its shape longer. Also take a look at the crown. See that it's creased right before you wear it.

Mr. Juster will be glad to answer your questions. He also has a booklet, "Guide to Better Dress," which includes a color chart, physical proportions chart, and many tips for improving appearance. The booklet is available free. Send stamped, self-addressed envelope to Harry Juster in care of this paper.

Boy, 15, Becomes Stranger in Home

By HELEN R. HEWSON

Teenagers often seem subject to sudden changes.

One worried mother writes, "Our son will be 15 in April. He has always been a good student, enjoyed organized sport and neighborhood play and gave us very little trouble. Now he is frequently argumentative and surly. He is untidy, has to be reminded many times of his homework and chores and his school work is not good.

"We are worried by this change in him. Can you help us to detect the cause?"

Do you remember when he was very little and tried to do things for himself? To feed himself, dress himself, but made an untidy job of it? Do you recall how at 6 or 7 he rushed in with muddy shoes, to the table with grubby hands. Coat, cap, and books were dropped where he shed them?

As human beings grow, change and development seem to be accompanied by both physical and psychological untidiness.

Fifteen is an in-between period for most boys.

They are throwing off old restraints and groping awkwardly for the new. It is time to give him a lift, a feeling of accomplishment.

Reduce the number of friction points.

Have him prepare a timetable for all the major events of the day, school, homework, sport, free time, chores, bedtime, etc.

Try a change of chores. Perhaps one or two worthwhile jobs in the week are more satisfying than the endless tidying up and putting away that is a battleground for many teenagers and their parents.

Do these little things yourself, quietly, no air of martyrdom. You'll be surprised how it pays off!

What's Cooking!

French Toast Good With Sausage, Bacon

By LOUISE MOORE

How often have you served other than plain buttered toast for breakfast during the past few months?

There is an old-fashioned dish that most of us go for in great style—when we can get it—and that is French toast.

French toast not only makes a delicious breakfast dish but it's ideal for a light luncheon or supper dish and a perfect partner with sausage or bacon for a Sunday brunch. It can be used as the main part of the meal with marmalade, honey, jams or maple syrup.

What's more, it's economical to serve. You can use up the stale slices of bread.

When making French toast allow one slice per person. Instead of the usual square of toast cut as large rounds as possible from each slice, then cut each in half to make two half moons for each plate.

Use only the freshest of eggs when making French toast.

FRENCH TOAST

For 6 slices of bread beat 3 fresh eggs just enough to blend the yolks with the whites. Add ½ tsp. salt and 1 cup milk (or half milk and half cream), 2 tsp. sugar and a dash nutmeg. Blend mixture and turn into a shallow dish.

Dip each slice or half moon into the mixture first one side then the other. Be careful not to get it soggy or it breaks. Brown one side then the other in plenty of butter. Serve at once with maple syrup, honey or what you wish.

WITH MEAT

For luncheon or supper dish do not use sugar and use any left-over cooked meat, fowl or ham, sliced. Put on one slice of bread and top with another slice. Hold together with toothpicks. Dip in egg mixture and brown on both sides in hot butter or bacon fat. Serve at once with red currant or cranberry jelly.

Beryl Nation Married

LONDON (CP)—Two members of Canada's foreign service were married today in St. Luke's Church, Chelsea.

They were Vernon Turner of Toronto, second secretary at Canada House, and Beryl Nation of Victoria, assistant secretary to High Commissioner George Drew.

The bride, wearing a white satin dress with train and veil, was given away by the high commissioner in the absence of the bride's 85-year-old father, who is in Victoria.

Prominent members of the Canadian colony in London attended the ceremony, held in the parish church where Charles Dickens was married. The reception was at Drew's residence in Mayfair.

Winning Contract

By HOWARD SCHENKEN and RICHARD L. FREY

Balancing, as re-opening the bidding, is a decision, for even the most experienced player. As a rule, you should pass a doubtful re-opening hand when most of your length and strength is in opponent's suit. You can then be sure that your partner won't be trapping while, if you re-open, you will often assist your opponents to reach a better contract.

Answers to Bridge Quiz:

a. Double. Your partner may have a good hand, but length in diamonds may have prevented him from acting on the first round. Your action does not promise great strength.

b. One no-trump. With 10 points or so, in partner's hand, you may make game in no trump. East is unlikely to gain the lead, and West will continually be forced to lead away from strength.

c. Pass. Partner passed the opening bid; can't be too long in diamonds; therefore does not have too much strength. The opponents may have a far superior spot.

d. One spade. Your side should be able to make a part score.

e. One no-trump. Very similar to (b).

f. Double. Rebid two no-trump over any response by partner.

France Considering Building of H-Bomb

PARIS (AP) — France, an exultant newcomer to the ranks of the world's atomic powers, plans to follow up her successful test of a tower device in the Sahara Saturday with the explosion of an operational A-bomb.

There was every indication President de Gaulle's government, despite a storm of critical comment from abroad, intends to develop a nuclear arsenal in support of the French claim to equal voice with the U.S., Britain and Russia.

SWIFT SUPPLY
Maj.-Gen. Charles Allieret, chief of the French special weapons division, said the successful test of a plutonium device at Tanzeurouf, deep in Algeria, "will permit us to construct swiftly a completely modern nuclear arms supply."

Defence Minister Pierre Messmer said France is considering building a hydrogen bomb. Asked whether a French H-bomb was ready, he replied: "The problem is being considered."

De Gaulle voiced enthusiasm in a message to Atomic Affairs Minister Pierre-Gaullamat, who directed the test: "Hurrah for France! Since this morning she is stronger and prouder. From the bottom of my heart, thanks to you and those who, for France, have achieved this magnificent success."

MORE SLOWLY
France is known to have enough plutonium, a derivative of uranium 238, on hand for two atomic blasts and is slowly processing more.

The French blast appears to have been about equal to the first atomic bombs produced in 1945 by the U.S. Their energy was rated as the equivalent of that packed in 20,000 tons of TNT.

Hydrogen weapons developed since by the U.S., Britain and Russia are far more powerful.

The French blast was the world's first since the Big Three nuclear powers halted proving ground experiments in the fall of 1958 in preparation for their Geneva talks on banning further tests.

Touched off atop a 300-foot steel tower at dawn, the explosion lit the desert and paled the full moon. A mushroom cloud soared up in a wild mixture of colors—blinding white, violet and rose.

French officials said first indications were that there was no radioactive fallout in inhabited Sahara regions. Weather was ideal.

Anger, Praise World's Reaction

LONDON (UPI) — Voices were raised in anger, praise and dismay throughout the world yesterday over the French atomic test in the Sahara.

Russia's Tass news agency called the explosion "deplorable" because it "disregarded the views of world public opinion."

"The Soviet Union," Tass said, "believes that every further nuclear explosion, wherever it may take place, cannot but complicate the solution of the total and universal disarmament problem."

Sources in Britain said the explosion was an undeniable achievement which will have important political implications.

A Dutch foreign ministry spokesman expressed his "ad-

Red China The Next?

LONDON (UPI) — British scientist Dr. Tom Margerson said yesterday Red China will be the next country to explode an atomic bomb, and Canada and seven other countries now have the skill and the materials "to set about making an atomic device similar to France's if they want to."

He added that France is not far from a "very dirty H-bomb."

Thugs Demand Nazi Salute

NEW YORK (UPI) — Three thugs broke into the New York City town house of the Chilean ambassador to the UN, last night and fled with $200 and a bottle of champagne.

The hoodlums forced the ambassador, who is Jewish, to say "Heil Hitler" and give a Nazi salute several times.

Ambassador Daniel Schweitzer told authorities the men stayed in his apartment about 30 minutes, during which they opened a bottle of champagne and asked him to drink from it. He refused, and they took the bottle with them when they fled.

Schweitzer said two were in their 30s and the other in his 20s. One acted as though he had a gun in his coat pocket.

The men at first demanded $1,000 worth of jewelry. When he told them he didn't have any, they demanded money. He took $200 from his wallet and gave it to them.

One of the thugs asked him, "Are you Jewish?" When he said yes, they forced him to give the Nazi salute.

Schweitzer said the men had accents which he could not place.

Before leaving, the thugs cut a telephone line and ordered him not to call police. Two other phones remained in working order, and he notified authorities as soon as the men left.

MIAMI (AP)—Former Cuban businessman Rafael Garcia-Navarro said Saturday a new rebel force of 4,000 persons has been formed in Cuba and plans an uprising against Fidel Castro.

He predicted Castro will be overthrown this year. He said Cubans are angered by the trade pact signed with Russia and will rally to a full-scale revolution—which already has ample backing.

One shot like that in the Sahara at dawn Saturday falls far short of making France a nuclear power within the meaning of this law.

But the real problem, as officials privately concede, is not the rate of France's progress in this enormously costly atomic arms race as it is the record of political instability in France over the 15 years since the Second World War ended.

Crowd Waits in Rain For News of Royal Babe

LONDON (AP)—The Queen rested quietly in Buckingham Palace Saturday while a small crowd waited outside in pouring rain for news of a new royal baby.

Inside the gates, the palace staff was reported betting the royal baby will be a boy born on St. Valentine's Day—today.

Portable television cameras were in place at the entrance, ready to record the arrival of the Queen's physician when the baby is due and the posting of the royal announcement when it is born.

'Canadians Shouldn't Be Smug'

WINDSOR, Ont. (UPI)—Liberal leader Lester Pearson said Saturday night that Canadians have no cause to be smug or superior about the progress made towards racial and religious tolerance in Canada.

He said Canadians should strive to root out "every lingering manifestation of the disease of intolerance and discrimination" where it exists here.

Coffee Break In Canada For Mikoyan

STEPHENVILLE, Nfld. (CP)—Russian deputy premier Anastas Mikoyan last night chatted with town officials over a cup of coffee while waiting for his plane to re-leave for a journey home from Cuba.

Wearing a broad grin, the usually stern-looking Russian stepped from his plane and distributed Russian souvenirs to a group of youngsters who clustered about him.

HORNEPAYNE, Ont. (CP)—One man was killed and four others sent to hospital Saturday when a westbound CNR Super-Continental passenger train and an eastbound freight collided near this small community north of Lake Superior.

The CNR in Toronto confirmed the death of Albert Prairie, about 50, of Hornepayne, engineer of the passenger train. He had been listed as missing and presumed dead.

No severe injuries were reported among the 67 passengers. Many suffered minor injuries.

IN HOSPITAL

In hospital were Jack Keeler, engineer of the other train, with burns and a broken leg; C. A. Massey, a fireman, broken arm; Ken Statton, a brakeman, broken arm, and Frank Walton, a fireman, broken leg.

Train passengers were taken to Hornepayne where they were scheduled to leave later Saturday night on an alternative CNR route.

The CNR said it did not know when the mainline track would be cleared.

NO EXPLANATION

There was no immediate explanation of what caused the crash shortly after noon Saturday on a single track about 34 miles west of this community, 210 miles west of the Lakehead.

The passenger train left Montreal Friday and was due in Winnipeg Saturday night.

Both diesel locomotives caught fire after the wreck and indications were that fire might have spread to some of the cars of the freight and to non-passenger cars on the passenger train.

The Red Cross Hospital in Hornepayne, closed for a month due to a shortage of staff, was re-opened on an emergency basis and all available nurses were called in. The temperature was about 20 at the time of the crash.

Dr. William Petrie
... only one catch

Designed To Probe Ionosphere

By IAN STREET

Canada's first satellite is scheduled to be carried into outer space early in 1961 aboard an American rocket.

Dr. William Petrie, Victoria-born superintendent of the operational research group of the Defence Research Board, said in Victoria last night the capsule, packed with Canadian-designed instruments, will probe the secrets of the ionosphere.

First announcement that Canada would participate in U.S. satellite experiments was made several months ago by Prime Minister Diefenbaker.

BIG CONTRIBUTION

Dr. Petrie said in an interview, Canada has a big contribution to make in space science. He said only the U.S. and Russia, at present, have resources to enter the space technology race—the actual launching of heavy rockets and satellites into space.

He said Canada's satellite, to be launched from a U.S. base next year, is being designed to orbit between 300 and 400 miles above the earth.

SPECIAL JOBS

"One of the special jobs handled by the DRB is a continuing study of the ionosphere, especially in the far north," the scientist said. "We are planning to actually put our own instruments in a satellite that will cruise above the ionosphere to give us a look at it from above."

Dr. Petrie will address the Royal Astronomical Society in the auditorium at Victoria University on Monday at 8 p.m. His subject will be exploration of the earth's outer atmosphere and space.

The ionosphere is an electrically-conducting layer in the earth's outer atmosphere—beyond the stratosphere—and extends from heights of approximately 40 miles to 400 miles above the earth.

DRB scientists for several years past have studied the effects of solar disturbances on the ionosphere which frequently result in a blackout on long distance radio communications.

CARRIED ALOFT

"One of our big jobs is making the miniature equipment that will be carried aloft in the satellite," said Dr. Petrie. The payload for the ionosphere probe probably will be restricted to 100-200 pounds.

Dr. Petrie said: "Canada in the past 10 years has been

Pentagon Rapped 'Meddlers' Harm A-Sub Supremacy

WASHINGTON (AP)—Vice-Admiral Hyman Rickover says he fears the U.S. may lose its lead over Russia in nuclear submarines because of meddling by Pentagon higher-ups in the work of his team of naval atomic experts.

"We must maintain our lead in atomic submarines and nuclear propulsion," he said. "If we don't, we will give up 10 years of advantage, and that is what I'm afraid is going to happen to us because of the vast amount of interference to which my organization is subject."

Rickover appeared recently before the U.S. Senate space and preparedness committees. Asked about the over-all contest between the Soviet Union and the U.S., Rickover replied: "We are ahead of them chronologically, but as far as the rate of progress is concerned they are ahead of us."

He said naval atomic experts must spend so much time writing reports and explaining matters to a constantly changing group of superiors that it is almost impossible to get on with the job.

A photographer, invited to ICDE diamond jubilee party last night to snap the picture of the winner of a $250 diamond ring, nearly dropped his camera when his name was called out as the lucky recipient.

"Now I'll have to look for a girl," said Ralph King, 28, of Elford Street, as he had his picture taken with his own camera held by Owen Fowler, husband of the municipal ICDE regent.

Help Homeless Refugees Vanier Urges Canadians

OTTAWA (CP)—Governor Gen. Vanier urged Canadians by the sorrows which continue to take up the cause of these refugees—especially those who are handicapped, tubercular or suffering from war wounds.

He said no country such as Canada can remain unmoved and purpose.

Driver Won Race But Paid Penalty

LAKE COWICHAN — A motorist who raced a train to a crossing — and won — was fined for it in court here yesterday.

Abe Earl Brunisma of Measachie Lake pleaded guilty to a charge of failing to stop when he saw the train approaching the crossing.

Magistrate C. L. Anderson fined him $20 and endorsed his licence. The offense took place Wednesday at the E & N railway crossing west of here on the South Shore Road near the Post Office.

Police said it was a near accident and the train crew reported it after taking the car's licence number.

DUNCAN — City firemen put out the same fire twice yesterday. Belching smoke hindered rooftop operations at the home of Rudolph Saterpakka, 1081 Canada, when a chimney caught on fire.

But firemen cleaned the chimney and stopped the fire after 9.45 a.m. they were called again half an hour later when the pipes became hot again and some combustion resulted.

VANCOUVER (CP)—James William Tuley, 20, of Ladysmith, was acquitted Friday on a charge of robbing grocery store owner Mrs. Isobel Edwards of $43.

Tuley and Joseph Reginald Thompson, 19, of Nanaimo were arrested following the Jan. 19 holdup. Thompson was convicted last week and sentenced to six months definite and nine months indefinite.

'Got a Break' DUNCAN—Albie Charlie, 76, had his drivers' licence suspended for 30 days on a charge of impaired driving.

Magistrate C. L. Anderson told him Friday "I'll give you a break" and fined him only $50.

The magistrate warned Leslie Beer, of Victoria, he would lose his drivers' licence if he appeared in court within a year.

The magistrate fined him $25 for careless driving. Hugh Eckhart of Lake Cowichan was fined $15 for speeding.

TOFINO—The funeral took place recently with full Legion Honors, at Chilliwack, B.C., of Mr. Donald M. MacKenzie, a veteran of World War One and a resident of Tofino for 37 years.

Mr. and Mrs. MacKenzie were former owners of beautiful MacKenzie Beach here, and sold out four years ago, when they moved to Chilliwack, B.C.

The late Mr. Don. MacKenzie was a life member of Br. No. 65, Clayquot Sound Canadian Legion, B.E.S.L., Tofino. A memorial service was held in St. Columba Anglican Church Tofino by the Rev. J. W. Leighton.

TOFINO—The Variety Concert sponsored by the Tofino Library Association in the Legion Hall was highly enjoyable.

Among those taking part were Mrs. Sylvia Homewood, Mrs. Gordon Anderson, Mrs. David Bond, Robert Homewood, Gordon Anderson, Kenneth Gibson, Mrs. Larry Arnet, Mrs. Kenneth Gibson, Mrs. Ronald MacLeod, Piper Murdoch MacLeod, David Stone, Elmer Salisbury, Mrs. Roland Arnet, A. White, Mrs. J. Georgeson, Mrs. R. R. Barr, Mrs. J. Georgeson, Mrs. Mary Richards, and Miss Isabella Grant.

ALBERNI—Harry Heighon Tilley, a retired blacksmith, who had lived in this area for the past 21 years, died suddenly Friday at his home on Walker Road in the Beaver Creek district.

Mr. Tilley was born in England in 1887. He leaves his widow, Helena; five sons, Alfred, Lloyd, Ivan and Allan, of Alberni, Roy, Qualicum; seven daughters, Mrs. Florence Kapchinsky, Mrs. Rose Young, Mrs. Ivy Ellis, Mrs. Grace Bodesso, Mrs. Doreen Silviu, all of Alberni; Mrs. Alice Lovell, Monticello, Utah, and Miss Lila Tilley at home; also 26 grandchildren.

Funeral will be held Monday. Burial will be in Alberni Valley Memorial Gardens.

Fined $45 DUNCAN — O. Thomas Doney, 45, of Cowichan Station, has been fined $45 for operating as a stock dealer last year without a government licence.

QUALICUM BEACH — Officers of the Mt. Arrowsmith Women's Auxiliary to Nanaimo General Hospital were installed at a "first birthday" meeting in the Central V.I. Health Unit building. There were 29 attending.

Officers are: vice-president, Mrs. M. Urie; second vice-president, Mrs. J. McMillan; secretary, Mrs. L. Hobbs; treasurer, Mrs. A. Norman; directors, Mrs. H. Hollins, Mrs. W. Gould, Miss J. Stokes. Guest speaker was Russell Inkster, chairman of the Nanaimo Hospital board of directors.

Gordon Frith, Nanaimo Hospital administrator, spoke briefly. He presented the group with a speaker's rostrum, a gift from Mrs. Inkster.

PARKSVILLE—D.W.J. Dare has been elected as president of Parksville District Camera Club recently formed at a well-attended meeting.

Other officers are secretary, treasurer, George Larnder, and an executive committee of three comprised of H. Mohr, Thomas McMillan and Sam Gough. The committee will act as program planners.

On February 16 at 7.30 p.m. the next meeting will be held at the Junior High School.

PARKSVILLE—Plans for the second annual Children's Revue were completed at the monthly meeting of Parksville Women's Institute.

Conveners for the event are Mrs. W.J. Roscow, W.P. president, and Mrs. Jack Tryon, and a varied program will be presented entirely by children.

Mrs. Roscow and Mrs. W. H. Morris will be delegates to a meeting of Parksville Community Society on Feb. 24 when an advisory board is to be formed.

A letter was read from the Canadian Cancer Society, B.C. Division, asking the W.I. to sponsor a meeting of Parksville unit.

Rotary Club DUNCAN—P. W. Ogilvie, of Vancouver, will address the rotary club here Feb. 29 and meet executives of the local CNIB branch. The assistant superintendent, CNIB western division, will speak of the work done by the organization.

LADYSMITH — Cowichan Deanery Women's Auxiliary of the Anglican Church of Canada, embracing 20 branches, returned the presiding officers unanimously for another year at the annual meeting at St. John's Church Hall, Duncan.

Rev. David B. Houghton, rural dean, and rector of St. John's Church, Ladysmith, conducted the election. Officers are: Chairman, Mrs. H. D. Arnold; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Hubert Hansen; Dorcas secretary, Mrs. Harold Hayward.

The rural dean commended the chairman for her splendid report and concrete suggestions. These are forwarded to the diocesan annual meeting to be held in Victoria March 8, 9, 10.

Guest speaker of the afternoon was Mrs. H. D. Martin, wife of Bishop Martin, retired last October after 20 years as Bishop of Saskatchewan. Now living at Victoria, Mrs. Martin told a graphic story of the great work, both Indian and white, going on in that diocese.

Attending the Deanery meeting from St. John's Anglican Church, W.A., at Ladysmith, were president Mrs. W. H. Palmerly, Mrs. Charles Tilley, Mrs. W. H. Bryant, Mrs. J. E. Flinton, Mrs. R. E. Nimmo, Mrs. D. B. Houghton and Mrs. Joseph Little.

Born at Nanaimo DUNCAN — Mrs. Gertrude Margaret Bernier, 55, a resident at Cowichan Bay for two years, will be buried here tomorrow. She died Feb. 13 in Nanaimo General Hospital.

She was born at Nanaimo, educated at Ladysmith and lived in Chemainus for 20 years before moving to Cowichan Bay.

Surviving are her husband, Andrew, at home; three sons, Hugh and Alan at Cowichan Bay, and Wayne at New Westminster; and a brother, C. C. Jones at Ladysmith.

Rev. W. E. Greenhalgh will officiate at the service in the First Funeral Chapel starting at 2 p.m. Cremation will follow at Royal Oak in Saanich.

PORT ALBERNI: A committee has been organized here to support the plan to raise Victoria College to university status.

At an organizational meeting this week, Dr. V. P. Gilbert was appointed general chairman of the group which will assist in the project of raising $2,500,000. Similar committees are being set up in other major communities of Vancouver Island.

Vice-chairman of the local committee is W. F. Ramsey, principal of Alberni District High School. Others in the organization are: George F. Cole, secretary; A. B. Armstrong, finance chairman; W. E. Russell, publicity; George L. Thompson, organization; Dr. J. Bateman, G. C. Jamieson, Dr. G. Lott, Eugene Rutan and Gordon Ballantyne.

Against Vegetable Board 'Patronage' Charge Hurlled By Angry Island Farmer

Brash Youth In Trouble

ORILLIA, Ont. (CP)—Police complied when they received a letter from a youth asking for a recommendation that was required before he could join the navy in Halifax.

But the recommendation was sent to Halifax police. It suggested the youth be arrested as Orillia police were looking for him in connection with a theft charge.

A Ladysmith potato grower who has charged that B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board elections are staged without a secret ballot launched an attack last night on the board's accounting practices.

George Wyndlow, who said he will try to unseat the board's Vancouver Island member, Don Wilson of Ladysmith, at an election next April if the government will guarantee a secret ballot, levelled a new barrage of charges highlighted by an accusation of "patronage."

An agency of the board collects assessments from all registered growers, he said, then distributes "patronage dividends" from the assessments to members of a co-operative.

"The attorney-general has ruled this practice illegal," he said.

Potato growers are charged $3 a ton for potato sacks which "in a vast majority of cases (are) never supplied or used," he added.

An agency of the board, he continued, is forced to pay income tax on "profits" in spite of the fact that "it is required under its own rules and regulations to operate for the growers at cost."

He said he has not yet received a reply from the provincial government to his request that this year's marketing board elections be by secret ballot.

Griffin Rites Held From Duncan Home

DUNCAN—Funeral services for Thomas Charles Griffin, 53, who died suddenly Jan. 5 were held Wednesday from his home.

Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Annie Griffin; two brothers, William and Gwynne; five sisters, Mrs. Harry Hooson, Mrs. F. C. Slade, Mrs. Don Kellow, Mrs. Violet Smith and Mrs. Edward Taylor, all of Victoria; three stepdaughters, Mrs. David Dougan of Cowichan Bay, Mrs. Ruth Stirling of Duncan and Mrs. Connie Collins of Victoria; and one stepson, Arthur Gilroy.

He served overseas with the Seaforth Highlanders during the Second World War and was a member of Branch 53, Canadian Legion, in Duncan.

Funeral services were held under the auspices of the Canadian Legion and pallbearers were from the local branch. "Last Post" was sounded at the graveside and members filed past to deposit poppies as a final mark of respect to a departed comrade.

Archie's Ready To Work Again

Archie McKinnon is back from Hawaii and ready to take up his old stand at Victoria YMCA.

Archie says he's aching to get back to his office in the Y and back to the job of teaching youngsters to swim and keeping people fit. The only thing that is stopping him is approval from his physician, and that is expected soon.

Archie and Mrs. McKinnon returned Friday night from Hawaii, where he has been convalescing after an accident at the Crystal Garden pool.

when he broke several ribs and suffered internal injuries during a comedy act.

"This has been an experience we'll never forget," he told friends. "It was a wonderful rest and a change and we're so grateful to our friends who made it possible. Now it's time to get back on the job again. A guy has to keep busy."

Gasping Try Misses Record

One day soon he'll do it, but John Thomas, brilliant Boston University high jumper, fails here in attempt to jump seven feet, two inches for world record. He cleared seven feet last

Cougars Muff Big Chance; Covet Second, Still in Fourth

This has been a season of "big" victories and muffed opportunities for Victoria Cougars, and the pattern was continued last night at Memorial Arena, where Vancouver Canucks scored their first Western Hockey League win here in seven starts, 3-2.

All season, the Cougars have been able to win the game needed to prevent a losing streak or protect their playoff

	W	L	T	P	A	Pts
Vancouver	10	3	2	1	1	22
Seattle	10	3	2	1	1	22
Edmonton	10	3	2	1	1	22
VICTORIA	10	3	2	1	1	22
Calgary	10	3	2	1	1	22
Winnipeg	10	3	2	1	1	22
Spokane	10	3	2	1	1	22

Last night's scores: Winnipeg 2 at Calgary 3; Seattle 3 at Spokane 2; Vancouver 3 at Victoria 2.

Next game: Tonight, Vancouver at Seattle.

chances. And all season they have been missing when presented with a chance to take a firm grip on second place and to threaten the leading Canucks.

Reasonably certain of finishing in the top four, the Cougars could have taken over the runner-up spot during the past two days. But they fell down in the third period at Seattle Friday, were beaten again in the final 20 minutes last night.

So, instead of 64 points, which would have left them in second place only seven points out of the lead, two points ahead of Edmonton and four ahead of Seattle, they are in fourth place, two points behind the Flyers and Totems.

They played well enough to win last night in a rugged, interesting 60 minutes which gave the 3,532 fans full value, but some missed chances and a couple of defensive lapses cost them the points.

TOUGH DEFENCE

Cougars had a bit of an edge last night but they couldn't crack the tough Vancouver defence, bulwarked by the very good Hank Bassen, to make up for the three goals the alert Canucks managed to get past Marcel Pelletier.

Vancouver's top lines of Ray Cyr-Colin Kilburn-Danny Belisle and Orland Kurtenbach-Bruce Carmichael-Dave Duke were blanketed by the Cougar checking, the former trio being particularly ineffective. But the so-called third line of Gordie Vejpava, Ron Hutchinson and Sandy Hucul, a converted defenceman, was a different story.

Vejpava and Hutchinson, both working hard, led the attack, the former scoring up the tie-breaker after 12 minutes of the third period.

FINE EVENING

It added up to a fine evening for Canucks' checking line, which also held Victoria's Art Jones-Gordie Fashway-Arnie Schmaltz combination pointless.

Action was on the bruising battle from the start as referee Scotty Morrison let fans in on some National Hockey League type of entertainment by ruling leniently although he did call 10 minor and two major penalties to barely stave off losing control.

Bassen was probably the difference. He made a big save on Arlo Goodwin in the first minute of the opening period, came up with a couple of dandy stops just before Canucks broke away for the winning goal.

Vejpava, coming out of the right corner just in time to get his stick, somewhat luckily, on Hucul's shot from the left side, deflected the puck past Pelletier for the first goal.

Cougars struck back immediately, Doug Macauley getting a quick shot away after picking up a rebound less than two minutes later. Then, worth pus the Cougars ahead after a Canuck had foolishly iced the puck during a Vancouver power play.

From the resulting faceoff, Goodwin got the puck back to Ron Matthews. And when Bassen went down to block his iced shot, Gordie Haworth was on the spot to backhand the rebound high over the prone goalkeeper.

Hero Born In Overtime

WINNIPEG (CP)—Here's one for the record books. In the Wee Canuck Basketball League of suburban West Kildonan, an organization of eight and nine-year-olds, the Canucks Friday night defeated the Hurricanes 1-0, Gordon Hewitt sank a free throw in overtime.

Last-Second Goal Sinks Seattle, 6-5

SPOKANE—Murray Wilkie deflected defenceman Bill Burega's blueline shot for the winning goal in the last second Saturday night and gave Spokane Comets a 6-5 Western Hockey League win over Seattle Totems.

It was the second goal of the period for Wilkie and his seventh of the season. Spokane has now won five of its last seven games but is still in last place in league standings.

Pat Ginnell had tied the score 5-5 for Seattle with a goal at 10:27 of the final, setting the stage for Wilkie's dramatic winner.

Ron Attwell and Earl (Ching) Johnson scored singles for Spokane while Marc Boileau and Ginnell scored twice each for Seattle and Jerry Leonard had the other.

A high blueline shot by Ralph Keller tied it up in the second period, Pelletier getting only a piece of the puck.

Then a Victoria defenceman left his post at the point during a sustained Cougar attack and got himself trapped. Vejpava broke out with Hutchinson to find only Jim Hay back. He passed at the right time. Hutchinson did the rest with a high shot which just caught the inside on the long side.

Vancouver — Goal: Bassen; defence: Macmah, Keller, Cahan, Dale Anderson, forwards: Kurtenbach, Carmichael, Duke, Vejpava, Hutchinson, Hucul, Cyr, Kilburn, Belisle.

Harper Rink Prime Favorite; Two Chances for Brier Trip

KELOWNA—Glen Harper's sharpshooting Duncan rink emerged on Saturday as the favorite to win the British Columbia men's curling title and the trip to Fort William next month to compete in the Canadian championships for the MacDonald's Brier Tankard.

Harper knocked out two tough combinations yesterday to reach the finals in one side of the double-elimination and is heavily favored to get to the finals in the other side. His is the only rink left with two chances.

In his first outing yesterday, Harper knocked off Eric Bisgrove of Kimberley, 6-4, to reach the semi-finals of the "A" event. Then he made it four in a row by taking out Roy Vinters of Vancouver, who had been rated as the favorite in pre-final judging. Score was 7-4 and Harper was in control all the way after cracking through for three on the first end.

KEY DRAWS

Vinters strove desperately to build a house, but steady knockout play and key draw shots never allowed him to get to the front. He got to 5-6 with two on the seventh end but Harper promptly got the pair back on the next end. He headed home leading 9-7 and never let the Vancouver rink get started on the final end.

Harper now meets Lyall Dagg of Vancouver, who qualified through the B.C. Brier in one final. Dagg evened the score with Dean Hayes, Fraser Valley zone champion from Haney in "A" event by staying alive with a thrilling 9-8 win.

Hayes led, 6-3, after eight ends but Dagg scored three on the ninth, conceded one on the 10th and added three more on the 11th to start home with a 9-7 lead.

FOUR MISSES

Dagg almost lost it on the home end as his front end missed a takeout four straight times. When Hayes came up for his last shot on the 12th end, he had five seconds in the house and needed only to dislodge shot rock to win. But he hit it a shade too full and pushed it onto one of his own rocks and was able to count but one.

Earlier in the day, Hayes had nipped Dagg, 7-5, in the quarter-finals of "B" while Bisgrove knocked Reg Stone of Trail out of the competition with an 8-7 victory.

Yesterday's results left five rinks, out of the 12 who started the final, still in contention for the coveted Brier chance.

Semi-finals in "B" event are scheduled at 9 this morning. Hayes to meet Bisgrove and Harper to meet Herb Taylor, Yukon zone champion from Whitehorse.

Taylor scored the biggest upset of the final by eliminating veteran Dick Topping of Summerland but is not expected to give the accurate Duncan rink any trouble.

Harper and Dagg tangle in the final of "A" event at 1 p.m.

Matt Baldwin Beaten; Richardsons Repeat

Matt Baldwin, one of the two skips to win as many as three Canadian curling championships—Ken Watson is the other—was eliminated in provincial playdowns for the second straight year yesterday but the defending Canadian champions—Regina's Richardsons—made it to the Dominion final.

Stu Beagle, who hails from Blackie but who is playing out of Calgary, was the skip who took Baldwin out in the Alberta Consols finals, played at Lethbridge.

Beagle won it by beating Baldwin twice in the four-rink double-elimination play which also included Lloyd Larson of Sexsmith, Peace River, Northwest Territories winner from Yellowknife.

Baldwin lost first in the opening draw of "B" event, 8-5, in a close-to-the-vest battle.

CONCEDES TWO

Beagle took a one-rock lead by stealing a point on the ninth, Baldwin tied it on the 10th but was forced to concede two on the 11th and lost one on the 12th when he couldn't make a double takeout and stick for the tying point.

Beagle then went on to beat Larson, 11-4, in the finals of "B" side.

Both Beagle and Baldwin won the first game in "A" side and Beagle made certain no playoff would be necessary when he walloped the Edmonton rink, 9-4, with a strong finish.

Baldwin had an early 3-1 lead but Beagle cracked down for three on the eighth, got another triple on the 10th and Baldwin conceded after 11 ends.

The defending Canadian champions also took the short route to the Dominion final by taking two straight in the Saskatchewan final, an all-Richardson final.

Ernie Richardson, again supported by Arnold, Garnet and Wes Richardson—a family combination of pairs of brothers who are cousins—bested veteran Glen Richardson of Saskatoon, 10-6, yesterday afternoon. The Regins had won Friday night, 9-4.

The Regina rink romped to a huge lead, scoring four on the first end, one on the second and two on the third for a 7-0 margin. Glen fought back but could get no closer than 9-6.

Victories for Beagle and Regina's Richardsons brought to four the number of combined provincial champions. Earlier in the week, Winnipeg veteran Max Scales, who won the Canadian Legion championship last year, climaxed years of trying by winning the Manitoba championship. Yesterday in Quebec City, a Montreal machine quarter skipped by Ted Hunt completed a sweep of the Quebec final by defeating George Boulay's rink from Drummondville, 8-7.

Victoria University took it on the chin in both ends of an exhibition basketball double-header Saturday night at Gordon Head campus.

Vikings fell 53-38 to UBC Jayvees in the feature game after the Varsity "B" team had dropped a 53-33 decision to Courtenay High School in the opener.

Courtenay, with only seven players, made short work of the host team in the preliminary. Gordon McKay scored 14 points to lead the winners while Wayne Farmer duplicated this feat for Varsity "B".

Vikings held UBC to a 26-24 lead in the opening half of the feature but wilted badly in the last two quarters.

Mike Potkonjak, former Cumberland star, led UBC with 18 points while Dave Black had 11 for Vikings.

The Car Corner

Dart Bridges Gap

Small Dodge Has Charm of Own

By J. T. JONES

The new Dodge Dart is a kind of bridge between the compact cars and the former low-priced three-between the Chrysler Valiant and the Plymouth, to be exact.

It has a lot in common with what I've always called the "Plymouth" Dodges — made and sold in Canada and unheard-of in the U.S. — which were Plymouths with Dodge trim. The Dart is basically a Plymouth with a body all its own, and shorter and lighter than a Plymouth.

Dog's Hate Dies Hard

LONDON (UPI) — Psychiatrists pronounced Butch the bulldog cured yesterday. Butch made something of a splash three months ago when a magistrate ordered him executed. He had bitten dozens of neighborhood pets. His owner, Mrs. Constance Gamble, pleaded for another chance for Butch and the magistrate relented, allowing Butch to enter London's canine Defence League kennels for psychiatric treatment — to be cured or killed.

Yesterday a league spokesman said Butch has been tamed and no longer hates other dogs.

He now hates cats.

Desert Gives Up Wartime Victims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The desolate sands of a North African desert have yielded up the bodies of five members of the Lady Be Good bomber crew after nearly 17 years.

Their four colleagues may lie buried somewhere nearby.

High School Parley Set

Six Victoria and district high school students will be among 270 from across the province attending the annual B.C. high schools conference, Feb. 26 and 27, at the University of British Columbia.

The conference, organized 13 years ago to acquaint high school students with all aspects of university life, is sponsored by the UBC Alma Mater Society, the B.C. Teacher and Parent-Teacher Federation and the UBC administration.

Attending from this area are Leslie Underwood and Audrey MacDonald of Royal Oak High School; Lorna Boshier and Douglas Alexander of North Saanich High School, and Mary Boyle and Mary Nicolson of St. Ann's Academy.

The Dart has a certain charm all its own, though. Being shorter it's a bit handier in traffic and parking. Being lighter it should be a bit livelier and better-handling (although I couldn't feel any marked improvement over Plymouth's already high standards) and, having its own style of dashboard, it has the edge on just about every car in the legibility of what instruments there are.

As for power, the Dart has a tremendous range of choices — from the new canted six of Plymouth (a larger version of the Valiant engine) to the thundering big Dodge V-8. Thus it can give good reasonable mileage in one form, and neck-snapping get-away in another. (And no one will know, as they draw alongside, which it is.)

The old "Plymouth" Dodge, formally called the export model, was born because Canada's Dodge-De Soto dealers needed a bread-and-butter car to compete with the low-priced three. I don't know the sales figures of the past, but I'm sure I've seen five little Dodges for every big one.

I've also seen a lot of letters to various automobile publications, along this line: "I saw a car in Buffalo with Ontario plates, and it was a Plymouth with a Dodge grille — what is it, please?"

These same grilles (like Meteor and Monarch grilles)

were a big seller among the California Kustom crowd.

But back to the Dart, and the part that's all its own. On rough roads, its unit-built body stands the gaff with very little shake, and promises to be solid for the car's life. Handling, as I said, is almost like the Plymouth's, and very good, too. Ditto the ride.

Inside, it's roomy and comfortable, having lost nothing in the shortening but a few inches of useless overhang.

Someone Must Lose Face In Golfo Nuevo

Marine expert John Frederic Gibson, now living in Victoria, served from 1941 to 1945 in Royal Navy submarines in Mediterranean and Far East. His sub was "trapped" on a number of occasions in bays, rivers and harbors and hunted by most modern search gear and ships, but always escaped, although once reported "sunk" by the enemy.

The Argentine Navy is now facing in practice some of the difficulties which await all navies in future wars. The various methods of detecting underwater objects have not changed very much since the last war. The Argentine warships are probably equipped with hydrophones, asdic and echo-sounders; they will also have radar to help locate a submarine on the surface.

The submarine cannot be trapped in Golfo Nuevo unless it is damaged, and no submarine commander will hang around in a confined area unless he is forced to do so for technical reasons.

Cannot Move

So one can assume the commander either thinks that he is safe where he is or cannot move his boat from the area.

The conventional submarine is not equipped to remain submerged for long periods. After about 15 hours, there is insufficient oxygen in which to light a match or smoke a cigarette. Once this point has been passed the crew become light-headed and almost irresponsible.

Flat Battery

The first sub's commander may be in the unfortunate position of having a flat battery. If this is the case his plan would be to sit on the bottom during daylight and surface after dark to recharge with his diesels.

He would probably come up close to the shore in order to avoid radar detection. This technique worked in the last war. One British submarine spent two days and nights in Corfu harbor and escaped down a narrow, 10-mile channel to the sea.

Great Tension

Tension in the submarine must be very great. There is no war, but someone has to lose face in this business.

In this cat-and-mouse game, the sub commander would normally hold all the aces. Even when his underwater location is known the chances are his boat will survive depth charges for indefinite and haphazard assault.

Good Reason

My own view is that if this object is a submarine there must be some very good reason why it has not made a dash for freedom. And if it has been seriously damaged the commander might, before now, have tried to get his men ashore under cover of darkness.

The Argentine navy, for its part, cannot expect to close a 10-mile gap with mines. Its best course would be to have ships stationed at various points in the gulf with their engines stopped so hydrophones can pick up the sub's diesels.

If asdic contact could be maintained while the submarine was on the bottom dragging operations could be started.

Where's Home?

The first submarine must have come up for air several times during the last 10 days. It could probably have made its way from the Gulf but would then be unable to make its way to its home base, wherever that may be.

My sympathies lie with the commander. He will probably be receiving absurd orders from politicians. He could probably sink the Argentine navy if he so desired. But he will have to sweat it out until his engineers are ready to proceed.

SUNDERLAND, England (UPI)—William Moody made a mistake, a costly one.

Aboard ship, the 41-year-old merchant seaman brooded about the quarrel he had in port with his wife. "I will get a separation and another man," she had threatened.

In court yesterday, Moody's defence attorney said: "This is a case where jealousy ran riot."

Moody "ran riot" when he got back into port and headed straight for his flat.

His key didn't fit the lock. "I thought my wife had locked me out," Moody said. He broke in.

"When I got in and she was not there I lost my head and started to smash the place up," he said.

Moody smashed a table and hammered chairs against the walls. He splintered the crockery and destroyed bric-a-brac.

He spotted a new washing machine. "I thought the wife's fancy man had bought the washing machine. That's why I smashed it," Moody said.

Moody finally rammed a fist through the wall mirror, cutting a wrist. He rammed off to a hospital.

Minutes later, the housewife came back to her shattered

apartment. "I was so shocked when I saw my dream flat in ruins that I fainted," testified Mrs. Kathleen Burrell, 26.

Mrs. Burrell is Moody's next-door neighbor. The enraged Moody had confused the Burrell apartment for his own.

Moody was convicted of disorderly conduct and causing malicious damage, and fined $61.60.

"It was all a mistake," he said. Mrs. Moody said nothing.

Argentina Says

Second Sub Now Certain

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—The Argentine navy said Saturday two mystery submarines now are hiding in remote Golfo Nuevo.

The navy announcement said one of the subs in the gulf apparently has been damaged by a bombardment from navy warships and aircraft.

The statement came at a time many Argentines were beginning to doubt there was any submarine at all in the remote gulf. There has been a 15-day hunt for an elusive underwater vessel supposed to be lurking in the 20 by 40-square-mile gulf 650 miles southwest of Buenos Aires.

A terse communique from the secretary of the navy said naval and air operations in the gulf are continuing and added: "The existence of two submarines in the gulf has been confirmed, one of them apparently damaged and the other apparently conserving all its operating conditions."

Rumors of Escape

The navy announcement led to speculation that a second submarine was trying to distract Argentine search forces away from a crippled sub in an effort to let the damaged vessel escape from the blockaded gulf.

The Argentine navy said two United States transport planes are bringing modern anti-submarine weapons here that were urgently requested by Argentina and "are of indispensable necessity to continue operations."

The continuing accounts of lurking submarines provoked mounting excitement in Buenos Aires and the possibility of international complications heightened the tension.

There was mounting speculation that the reported submarines might be Soviet. Argentina regards the entrance of a submerged submarine in the gulf as an invasion of territorial waters.

Another Stranger

Two Dutch warships, the destroyer Groningen and the frigate Van Amstel, and two Avenger anti-submarine aircraft reported from Curacao in the Dutch West Indies that a strange submarine may have been traced in that Caribbean area.

The Dutch said radar and anti-submarine detection apparatus had disclosed the presence of an unknown object Friday. A check showed the Dutch submarine Walrus in the area was too far away to have been involved.

Three B.C. Projects

'Mom' Whyte Plans Homes, Dude Ranch

SUMMERLAND, B.C. (CP) — Mrs. Bertha "Mom" Whyte announced Saturday that she and husband Robert plan a three-phase project in B.C.

The Whytes have taken over operation of the Mountain View Home for elderly citizens in this Okanagan Valley community on a three-year lease. They plan to build, in addition, an emergency home and children's summer camp on their property near Nelson "as soon as the snow goes."

DUDE RANCH

Mrs. Whyte also told reporters they will start a dude ranch in the Cariboo district. Plans for this venture are not completed yet.

Meanwhile, she said, she and Mr. Whyte would like to get acquainted with the people of Summerland and "let them get to know us better."

"People here have the idea that some wild woman from Borneo has come among them," Mrs. Whyte said with a smile.

ONE PURPOSE

"We want to allay these fears and show that we're here for one purpose—to help people and to help make Summerland a better place to live."

Immediate plans are for a public showing of slides of the Whytes' former home at Bowmanville, Ont., which was closed by Ontario authorities on the grounds that the scores of orphans and other children being kept there were not being properly cared for.

LONG BATTLE

Mrs. Whyte came to B.C. with members of her former staff after losing a lengthy battle with health authorities in the east.

Mrs. Whyte said she has a staff now of 11 persons, with their eight children, who accompanied her from Bowmanville.

Additional staff is still to come. Four or five of these will operate Mountain View, which has accommodation for 20 senior citizens. The rest of the Whyte staff will go to the Nelson project and the dude ranch.

NEXT YEAR

It is hoped to have the emergency home near Nelson in operation this year but the summer camp may not be operating until next year, Mrs. Whyte said.

Like the Bowmanville home, the Nelson project will be open to all persons needing assistance — unmarried mothers, emotionally disturbed individuals and handicapped persons as well as their children.

"People have the idea that we've worked only with homeless children," Mrs. Whyte observed.

"But that's not true. We ran our emergency home for anyone who needed it."

New Calendar Idea

Thirty-One Days Hath September!

"Thirty-one days hath September, Jan., March, May, July, and November. In Leap Year all the rest have 30.

In other years, old Feb. plays dirty, And everybody knows it cheats, anyway."

Don't sneer. Children might be learning that little poem in school some day if a B.C.

man can get the world to adopt his new calendar. Should J. H. Coldwell of Crescent Beach have his way, "Thirty days hath September" will be passed.

Among other things, the "Excelsior" calendar will put New Year's eve on Dec. 21; give girls an extra day's husband-hunting each leap year. Starting with January months would have 31 and 30 days alternately. Except February, that is. February, always the non-conformist, has 29 days in regular years and 30 days each leap year.

Basis of his calendar is an attempt to quarter the year with the seasons. For this reason, each year would have to begin Dec. 22, the start of the winter solstice, giving people three days to recover from New Year's Eve in time for Christmas.

But don't start tearing down your calendars yet. Monday won't fall on Dec. 22 until 1969, so Mr. Coldwell can't put his calendar into action for nine years. Meanwhile, start practising: "Thirty-one days hath September..."

Hold a Nation-Wide Design Competition For City Auditorium, Architects Urge

By TERRY HAMMOND

Victoria is entitled to an architecturally outstanding civic auditorium and the way to get it is by means of a nation-wide design competition.

That was the unanimous opinion of half a dozen city architects polled by the Colonist last night.

A seventh backed the idea of a competition but thought it should be restricted to B.C. architects.

They agreed that a truly outstanding design for the auditorium could set a new architectural pace in Victoria which would influence the aesthetic values of new construction for years to come.

They see the design of a new auditorium as a bright challenge which, if successfully met, would prove the artistic integrity of B.C.'s capital city.

And they pointed out that architectural competitions in Canada have recently produced fresh, sparkling designs for a new Winnipeg city hall and a Vancouver civic auditorium.

"Staging an architectural competition for our auditorium

JOHN DI CASTRI
... get the best

would be a terrific idea," said Peter Cotton, chairman of the Victoria chapter of the Architectural Association of B.C.

He said it "would settle all doubts" as to whether the city would be getting a good plan.

The competition, he continued, should not be narrowed to purely B.C. architects.

"If a B.C. firm gets the job it should get it against competition."

B.C. architects stand a good chance of winning such a competition if their record in winning the Massey medals is any criterion, he said.

"We have a pretty good batting average out west," he added.

He pointed out that Victoria architect Charles E. Craig won the Massey gold medal for architecture in 1955 for his design of Kiwanis Village. Mr. Craig's design topped submissions of 800 other Canadian architects and won him what is considered the top award in the national architectural field.

Mr. Craig also favors a competition for the auditorium design, but points out that by extending qualification to architects outside the province most B.C. firms would probably not enter.

A competition, he said, "would provide a far better solution (to the auditorium design problem) than having it done by one firm or by a city hall architect."

Also warmly enthusiastic to the possibility of a competition for designing Victoria's proposed new auditorium was John Di Castri, who achieved notoriety here in 1957 when he termed the design of B.C.'s new Government House on Rockland Avenue as "a half-million-dollar monument to bad taste—a perfect example of the prostitution of a great art."

Last night he said, "With a competition we are going to get the ideas of all the architects—we might well get something truly outstanding."

well to pick jurors of undoubted architectural reputes.

Importance of having a fine example of architecture in a Victoria auditorium cannot be overstressed, he stated.

Robert W. Siddall said, "The results of architectural competitions held in Canada have justified this approach."

Of a competition for the city auditorium he said, "I would think that it should not be less than Canada-wide in scope."

"A competition offers the city a guarantee of a good job and a useful building."

The design of the building, he continued, "will inevitably influence" the integrity of future construction here.

He said the overall cost of the project would be increased by about one per cent if it was handled by competition as compared to simply awarding the design to a single firm.

C. DEXTER STOCKDILL
... much thought

said, is deductible from the design and supervision fee of the winning architect. The one per cent represents the cost of runners-up awards.

"If for lack of a competition we get a poor design, the architect's fee will have been of very little value."

He pointed out that the Winnipeg city hall competition drew more than 100 entries for a $15,000 first prize.

Patrick S. Birley, another Victoria architect who had outspoken views on Government House ("a good example of socialized architecture"), also favors a competition and said, "I would be very much opposed to the city's staff doing the design."

Role of the city's architectural staff should be to prepare the program from which competitors would proceed to design the structure, he said.

This would include a budget and general outline of the future functions of the building.

Walter W. Ekins said a competition is the logical approach to design of a municipal building.

"I am very much in favor of the idea—it could give the project a real shot-in-the-arm," C. Dexter Stockdill said he didn't think the slight additional cost of a competition should be a factor.

"By a competition we could be sure that a great deal of thought would go into the design," he said.

... terrific idea

He said his committee would "certainly consider" the possibility of a design competition. "And if the committee thinks there should be a competition there will be a competition," he stated.

He said previous city hall thinking was that the city's own staff would do the design.

A manhole at Government and Johnson where two B.C. Telephone Company employees were injured during a gas explosion Friday does not contain enough gas to cause another explosion, a B.C. Electric Company spokesman said last night.

The blast occurred shortly before noon. Presence of gas was "negligible" during subsequent tests made by the B.C. gas department at 4.30, 6 and 10.30 p.m. Friday and again at 8.30 a.m. yesterday, a spokesman said.

"There was a pocket of gas in there, but how it got there we still don't know," he said. It could have leaked there from a gas line during recent underground excavation nearby or it could have come from the ground or from a sewer, he said earlier.

Telephone workers Keith Ford, 3036 Jacklin, and Tom Walker, 69 Crease, both burned about the face and hands in the blast, last night were in satisfactory condition at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Saanich will only buy as much park land as it can afford over the next 15 years, but the total cost could well amount to more than $1,000,000, according to Reeve George Chatterton.

His statement came a few days after Councillor Harold Todd said he did not think the municipality would spend "anything like" the $1,326,900 park purchase sum outlined by Saanich planners as necessary from now until 1975.

ONLY HALF-MILL
Coun. Todd said Saanich should only spend its half-mill tax levy plus some revenue from sale of land.

Reeve Chatterton pointed out that if the municipality's assessment remained fixed over the next 15 years the half-mill would raise some $500,000. And if the assessment increased each year by the same amount it went up in 1960 the half-mill would yield about $750,000.

MORE THAN $1,000,000
With revenue from land sales the municipality might well spend more than $1,000,000 on park purchases, the reeve said.

But he pointed out that the park purchase blueprint prepared by the planning department was simply an outline of requirements based upon roughly estimated purchase costs.

IMPLEMENT IT

"Nobody has recommended that we simply implement it as it is," he said. "The purpose of the plan is to guide us in long-range provision of park areas."

Crippled Freighter

The Victoria tugboat Sudbury I is approaching the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait with another prize plucked from the stormy Pacific.

The veteran salvage vessel put a towline aboard the crippled Greek freighter Gloriana around noon yesterday, almost 24 hours sooner than expected.

FIRST POSITION

An Island Tug and Barge spokesman said last night the first position received here put the freighter, wallowing without a propeller, some 400 miles west of Cape Flattery.

Capt. Roy Blake, skipper of the Sudbury, reported he reached the helpless ship at about noon yesterday and gave his position as 230 miles off the cape.

NOT 150 MILES

"The ship would drift a certain distance between Thursday and Saturday noon," said Donald Elworthy, Island Tug vice-president. "But it certainly wouldn't drift 150 miles."

He said the first position provided by the ship's agent must have been in error.

SOMETIME MONDAY

The tug and tow are expected to pass through the Strait sometime Monday bound for Seattle where the freighter was headed when she lost a propeller in a Pacific storm Thursday.

At the start of her race to aid the stricken freighter, Sudbury I was battling 60-mile-an-hour gales, but the weather moderated as she approached the Gloriana.

Fingerprints Useless To Police

Defectives found two good sets of fingerprints on a safe which was opened overnight Monday at St. Joseph's Hospital, but it didn't help them solve the theft of $7,326 in cash and cheques.

Both sets belonged to hospital employees who were authorized to open the safe, police said last night. No glove prints were found either, suggesting that the culprit may have wiped clean the areas he touched during the daring robbery.

Trips Considered As 'Button' Prizes

Tourist trade group of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce will make an all-out effort to sell 20,000 Tourist Appreciation Week buttons this year with expense paid trips awaiting at least two button buyers.

A spokesman for the TAW committee said yesterday that trips to Honolulu and San Francisco are being considered as top prizes in a draw open to all who have purchased the distinctive lapel-pins.

The buttons will sell for 25 cents each and the committee hopes to raise some $5,000 from their sale.

A tentative school-participation program in tourist week plans calls for essay contests in junior and senior high schools and, possibly, a poster contest.

Essay contests will probably start next week and all entries will have to be in by April 1. Prizes have not yet been determined.

Also to be a main feature of TAW promotion again this year will be a public questionnaire for which prizes will be awarded to top entrants.

The committee official said this year's question may be designed to elicit ideas for a single major Victoria-tourist attraction.

Water Rate Policy

Saanich council plans to play Robin Hood with 1960 water rates.

It will take from the "rich" and give to the "poor."

To meet higher wholesale water rates from the Greater Victoria water board the municipality is working out a new rate schedule which will lean harder on the large consumer; more gently on the small consumer, Reeve George Chatterton said last night.

He said Saanich comptroller John Tribe has been asked to prepare a new rate schedule which will meet the new wholesale charges without demanding much of an increase from nominal users.

"We plan to do away with the low rate in the upper consumption brackets—it was below cost even at the old rates," he said.

"We want to keep the minimum rate about the same as it was."

Oak Bay has already announced a new rate increase and Victoria is studying its present rate structure with a view to doing the same.

Esquimalt consumers will be tied to the Victoria rate because the city owns the Esquimalt water system.

Another passenger, R. E. Dafee, also attached to the navy at Esquimalt, was in fair condition in Nanaimo General Hospital where he was treated for fractures of the leg, ankle and jaw.

Driver of the other car, George Oud, of Nanaimo, whose injuries were undetermined, was in fair condition.

With Miners Swarming on the Creeks 1860—A GOLDEN YEAR

GOVERNMENT leaders, businessmen, labor officials and citizens generally have been predicting that this year of 1960 will be a good one for British Columbia.

Premier W. A. C. Bennett promises that it will be the most prosperous in history. In the aggregate he may be right, but comparatively it will have to be very good to exceed that of 100 years ago, for the 12 months of 1860 were marked by good fortune and great accomplishments.

In paralleling the bounty of 1860 with the promise of 1960 it is essential that account be taken of the difference in populations. At the end of 1859 a conservative estimate would not give the two colonies of Vancouver's Island and British Columbia more than 15,000 inhabitants with white blood in their veins. These were all who were left from the 33,000 gold-hungry adventurers who had crowded into the country in 1858 when the stampede to the Fraser River was in full excitement. Today conservative calculations give the population of British Columbia as 1,700,000.

The promise of the immediate future includes immense hydro-electric installations on the Peace and Columbia Rivers; manufacture of steel; multi-million-dollar expansion of provincial highways and costly public works. Industry and commerce are confident of increased trade. It is a pleasant picture — but it has yet to be realized.

Now let us take a glimpse at the achievements of 1860.

Despite the movement away from the bars of the lower Fraser, and the trading alleys of Victoria, there were hardy, thin, bearded men, who were fascinated by the flow of the muddy river. They were experienced miners, and envisioned heavier enrichment in the sands and gravels of the stream in its upper reaches. They pushed upstream from the huts of Lytton to where Cayoosh Creek poured in to the Fraser; and there they found grain gold. Rough log shelters and torn and worn tents soon gave the importance of a "town" to the banks of the creek where men moiled and toiled profitably. Then, just a trifle north of Cayoosh where "The Fountain" flocked the brown waters of the great river with foam, even heavier gold was encountered.

Bridge River opened its treasure chest to the industry of the men who had dared to stake their future on their belief. And higher up — away up as far as Fort Alexandria, the old Hudson's Bay Company's trading post, and beyond — men dug and panned; and gold rewarded them. Ferguson's Bar attracted attention, and then Quesnel River (at that time spelled "Quesnelle") gave up its riches. Here, a new camp, that was to become permanent, came into being. It became a place in which the wanderers in the hills and along the streams could base their activities.

By
B. A. McKELVIE

From Quesnel little parties of two or three, back-packed their tools and meagre provisions, along the network of creeks that found their way to the main river. Then in the fall of 1860 Keithley Creek was located by "Doc" Keithley and his partner, Diller. They kept secret their knowledge that the ground was extremely rich, but gradually it became known, and the rush was on. Then, as the days began to shorten, Antler Creek was found — and Cariboo's fabulous story commenced.

Governor James Douglas, relying upon the faith of the experienced miners who had pushed upstream murmuring "higher and richer," was eager to help them. More productive mining ground was essential to progress of the little colonies. So, in 1860's early summer, he had reconnaissance made of the canyons above Yale, for a pack trail for horses and mules. Work was started as soon as possible. It was a trail of terrific grades and dangers, but it served its purpose and was favored by packers over the older route from Harrison Lake to Lillooet (or Cayoosh).

It was the same summer of 1860 that saw the establishment of municipal government. It would be proper for the Union of B.C. Municipalities to specially mark the centenary of this delegation of self government to localities. New Westminster will not forget, for the Royal City, which always honors its pioneers, will proudly proclaim its 100th birthday as the senior corporation of the country. It was in May, 1860, that residents of the then British Columbia capital conferred with Governor Douglas and asking control of its own affairs. It was granted by the issuance of a charter (in form of a proclamation) bearing date of July 17, 1860. The previous month a temporary municipal council had been set up by the governor at Yale. During the ensuing year it did magnificent work, but ended abruptly. There were few, if any, property owners at Yale when its council was installed. So New Westminster was the first regularly chartered corporation.

It was in 1860 that sawmilling expanded by the granting to Captain Edward Stamp, on behalf of British interests, lumbering concessions at the head of Alberni Canal. The great modern milling towns of Alberni and Port Alberni testify to the substantial character of the old captain's dream.

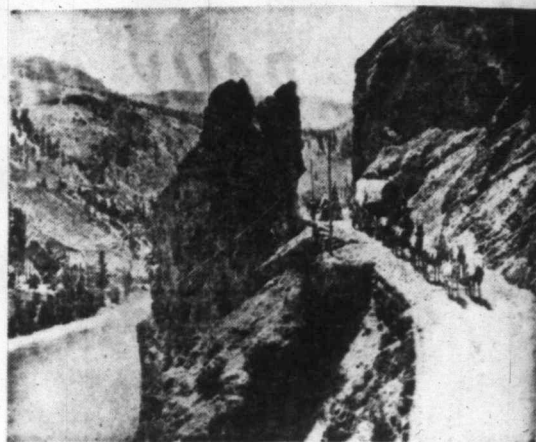

Cariboo's rich creeks were not only located by the "scouts with gold-pans", who fanned out over the rugged terrain of the Pacific slope. Before word of the success of Keithley and Diller, the yellow metal had been found in the Similkameen country. This could be reached by the old Hudson's Bay Company's fur brigade trail to Fort Hope from the Interior. But Douglas, the first "good roads" executive, realized that progress in a mountainous land must depend upon the ease of transportation. So Douglas commenced a road from Hope to the Similkameen that would permit the passage of vehicles.

Then beyond Similkameen on the other side of the great Okanagan country — Adam Beam filled his gold pan with sparkling gravel, and Rock Creek became the scene of another wild rush. They were mostly men from south of the border, and wild stories and baseless rumors of lawlessness in the camp were spread on the coast. The tall governor decided to find out the truth. He went there himself, and was so delighted with the conduct of the miners that he had a race track laid out for them. Good money was being made at Rock Creek and nearby Boundary Creek.

Then came reports from a party sent out by the government that all the creeks flowing from the west into Lake Okanagan were auriferous. So fearful was the governor that publicity to this new ground would draw men from Rock Creek and Similkameen that the good news was suppressed for a time. But some heard and went there. The following year when word of the wealth of Cariboo became known, Rock Creek and the other workings along the border were depopulated in the wild stampede to the north — and the once-coveted ground was left to transitory workers, and to Chinese, the patient toilers of mining.

At Victoria, the capital of Vancouver's Island, the commercial centre of the North-west Pacific, members of the House of Assembly were meeting in their new legislative chamber, built of brick and one of a group of pagoda-roofed public buildings. They viewed the commencement of an expanding trade and industry with satisfaction.

And on the Mainland, at New Westminster — the Royal City — the capital of British Columbia, there was optimism. Governor Douglas who, from his experiences with the representative form of government on Vancouver's Island, was suspicious of an elected legislature, ruled by proclamation — and with economy. It was with delight that he informed the Imperial government that despite large public works expenditures and the cost of maintaining the Royal Engineers with colonial pay, the finances of the colony for 1860 showed a credit balance of £10,685.

While anxious to open new placer mining areas, Douglas realized that the future of mining prosperity must depend upon lode deposits. So he sent Dr. Forbes of the Navy — a recognized geologist — to report upon the possible deposits of minerals in the hills fringing Harrison Lake. It was the first technical examination of its kind and may be regarded as the start of geological surveying on the Mainland.

But while 1860 saw many important undertakings and developments, the outstanding accomplishment was the bringing into prominence of the Cariboo. When the fabulous stories of the wealth of the creeks there became whispered about, artisans who had never mined, commercial men, clerks and apprentices quit their employment to scramble over the muddy trails and through the thickets that marked the way to the new Eldorado.

It was in the fall of 1860 that magistrate and gold commissioner Philip H. Nind, who had but recently been stationed at Williams Lake, visited the miners as far up the River as Quesnel, and gave an encouraging report to the governor of the country. But Nind did not learn at that time of the success that was being enjoyed by Keithley and Diller and other courageous prospectors to the east of the Fraser. He returned to his post, but shortly after the new year he was informed that trouble was brewing on some new and rich streams — and particularly one known as Antler Creek — over claim stakings. So Nind, who was a very capable official — started off once more, through the snow and cold, to do his duty. It was a hard trip. It was not until March 27, 1861, that he was able to report to the government on his journey and his observations. It was the first official report received on the new strikes of the previous autumn.

"During the winter great excitement has prevailed respecting the discovery of rich diggings at Antler Creek," he said. "The secrecy observed by its discoverers, the large prospects they were reputed to have found, together with the subsequent announcement of the situation of the creek, tended to inflame the minds of all, that a rush of people took place in the dead of winter to this new Eldorado."

"Many claims were recorded," he explained, "and in several instances the same ground was taken up by different parties. This led to contention, and almost to open violence, at one time deadly weapons being drawn, but happily with no evil result."

"Shortly afterwards, an appeal having been made for my interference, I determined to proceed to the Forks of Quesnel, and if necessary to Antler Creek. Accordingly on February 27 I left Williams Lake accompanied by a constable and two Indians carrying necessities for the journey. In consequence of the difficulties of travelling we did not reach the Forks of Quesnel until March 3."

Nind found the place almost empty of inhabitants and was told they were all at Keithley and Antler Creeks awaiting his appearance. He made his way to the Keithley and Diller property. It was a hillside working. "It was discovered last autumn," he noted, "and at first proved of almost unprecedented richness; a tunnel was bored into the bank, but owing to natural causes was obliged to be abandoned; subsequently the hill was pierced in two other places, but the lode seemed to be lost, for no prospects were found. Mr. Diller has persevered in

Brigadier-General Sir Sam Hughes, Canada's minister of national defence in 1915, inspected the 30th Battalion at the Willows camp before the unit's departure for overseas service. This was the 30th, along with its unofficial mascot.

By MORTON L. BENNETT

FOR THOSE WHO REMEMBER, it'll be 45 years ago this afternoon that, with a skirling of pipes and a thudding of drums, 1,100 men of the 30th Battalion, CEF, marched along Belleville Street to the CPR docks to jam pack aboard two ships, the Princess Adelaide and the Princess Mary and go to war. Escorting them part of the way were Sir Richard "Dick" MacBride's two famous submarines.

Time and the battlefield have taken their toll of the once proud 30th, but tomorrow night at the Gorge Vale Golf Club they'll hold their annual reunion. Richard J. "Dick" Prowse, of Inverness Street, keeps tab of the survivors on the west coast and expects to see three or four dozen on hand to dine and wine, "remember when" and give a silent salute to old comrades.

In this select little group every man knows his regimental number because they only ran to five figures, and they all start with "77."

Dick Prowse, who was born in Nanaimo (and whose father was one of the Royal Marines occupying San Juan Island) was 77366 when he joined the 30th on November 9, 1914.

The 30th never went into the line as a unit, Dick told me, for soon after their arrival in England 5,700 casualties in the First Canadian Division

(after the 2nd battle of Ypres) required urgent replacement. The 30th provided reinforcements for the 7th, 15th and 16th Battalions.

After that it was in and out of the line, as the months rolled into years of trench warfare.

For the wounded, no plasma, no helicopters, no short-wave radio. Just a procession of duckboards, mud and casualty clearing stations, while those back from leave whistled snatches from "The Byng Boys." All the time the roster of the original 30th dwindled; dwindled because the Canadians' battle casualties were staggering even in the light of the last war.

Vimy cost them 11,000, and Passchendaele Ridge, (two square miles of mud) another 16,000. Alongside the Australians at Amiens in the summer of '18, their 12-mile advance in four days cost them another 9,000. In that final year of the war there were battles that cost another 30,000—names like Arras, the Drocourt-Queant line, Canal du Nord and Cambrai have a fearful significance.

By the war's end, 424,000 Canadians had walked with death; 60,661 didn't come back. Canadian casualties were twice those of the U.S. Army, and the U.S. had 10 times the population!

Despite this, and the passage of time, Dick Prowse has 67 of his comrades' names in his little black book, and there'll probably be a good percentage of them on hand tomorrow night. They'll come from Alberni and Courtenay and Burnaby. Maybe Bugler W. Rainie will come down from Prince Rupert. He did last year.

The commanding officer of

No. 2 Company won't be there. His name was Cy Peck, and he won a VC with the 16th. But A. E. "John" Collins, of forestry fame, will be along, with Harold Nation and J. Ciceri, plus photographer R. H. "Bobby" Fort. On hand, too, will be J. A. "Bun" Hobday and A. H. C. "Aubrey" Jones, not to speak of a grocer called Ed Homewood from Alberni, and T. W. L. "Tam" Mutch of Victoria. Some others, of course, are too far away to answer the annual roll call. They're in places as wide apart as Montreal and Los Angeles.

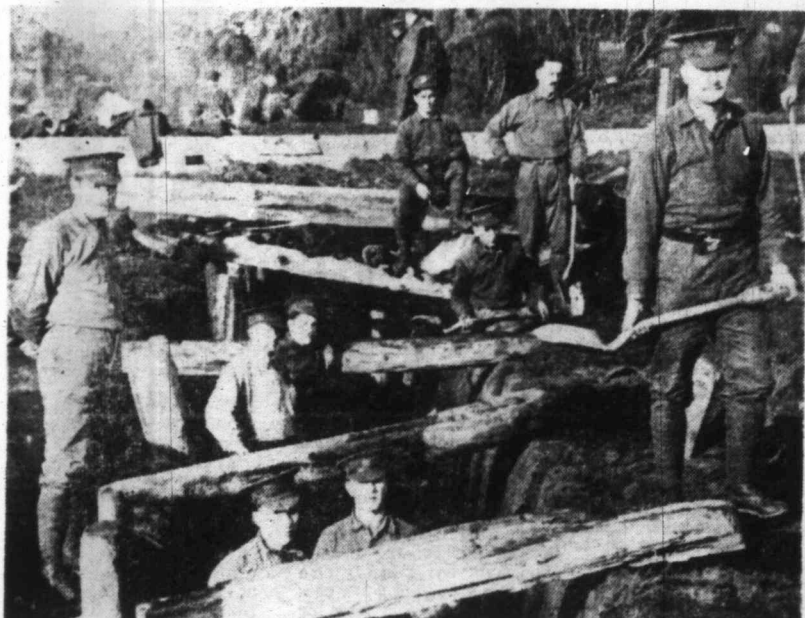

Shakespeare may not have had in mind a handful of men who bore regimental numbers in the 77000 bracket, but he put it correctly when he wrote: "We few, we happy few, we band of brothers; for, he today that sheds his blood with me shall be my brother..."

Survivors of the 30th are indeed a band of brothers.

All the World

This is Cupid's Day

By JOHN WINDSOR

ST. VALENTINE'S is with us once again, and that sprightly young gent, Dan Cupid, Esq., will be on the prowl, bow and arrow at the ready, to pick off any susceptible hearts. At least, I think he is still using a bow and arrow, but the way things are changing nowadays, he may well have discarded this armament Mind you, the technique employed to show that your feelings are a trifle more than platonic, does vary from age group to age group. The most scientific and business-like approach is to be found at the elementary school level, where the young hopefuls, both male and female — this is a leap year — quantity purchase their cards in large Valentine cut-out books. If young hopeful A. plans to pass out 37 of these cards, she informs the 37 recipients well ahead of time, thus ensuring that she herself will receive exactly 37 affectionate greetings in return. Who says that only businessmen know anything about the balance of trade?

The teenager has a somewhat different approach, one might almost call it selective. He seldom sends cards to more than five or six girls at a time, and each of these young ladies' is positively guaranteed, in rhyme, that all his love and undying affection are for her alone.

It is not until a little later in life that the going really becomes rugged for the male. Take the average bachelor, with no bad habits to speak of, who has been conscientiously saving his pay cheque against a rainy day. In a moment of weakness he decides to buy some fair young damsel chocolates for St. Valentine's, not, mind you, an ordinary dollar box, but rather one of those big heart-shaped efforts costing all of $2.50. This extravagance is greeted with squeals of girlish glee, and then before the poor chap quite knows what has happened, turtle doves are cooing all over the place and he's being hustled down to the nearest jewellers to look at diamond rings. Very sad.

But don't think for one moment that marriage brings an end to the Valentine custom. Feb. 13 and Feb. 15 are quite normal days when you and your spouse can hurl imprecations, platters, or even the kitchen sink at each other, but woe betide the husband who fails to bring home some token of love and affection on THE day.

This odd habit of setting aside one day in honor of lovers can trace its ancestry way back into the pagan past. In ancient Rome the Lupercalia, a festival in honor of the she wolf who mothered Remus and Romulus, the two founders of the city, was observed on Feb. 15, and at this celebration the Romans were inclined to live it up. One of the quaint old traditions was for each girl to draw from a box the name of the boy who was to be her beau for the following year. When the Christian church came to power, it wisely made no attempt to abolish the old customs, but tried instead to purify and give them a religious significance. Thus, the Lupercalia became St. Valentine's Day, a much more chaste and quiet celebration, during which the maidens drew from a box, not the name of their new heart-throb, but instead the name of some saint, whose virtues they were to try to emulate.

What the maidens thought of this change is not now known. The reason why St. Valentine was chosen as the patron of lovers has long since been forgotten, as has also his exact identity, for there were three Valentines who became saints during the early struggles of the church. However, our Valentine is thought to have been a Roman priest who was tortured and put to death about the 270 by the Emperor Claudius II, during one of the periodic persecutions of the Christians. He was buried on the Flaminian Way, just outside one of the gates, and sometime later when Christianity was officially adopted by the government, a church was built on the spot to commemorate his martyrdom. Incidentally the gate, known as Porto del Popolo, or Gate of the People, still stands.

One of the charming legends about him is that during his ministry he devoted much time to the young people, as their friend and counselor. After his arrest by the emperor's guards, the good priest was much worried by the fact that he could no longer help and advise his young flock, but in answer to his prayers a way was shown by which he could maintain contact. He was imprisoned in a tower and at the window of his cell grew a vine. Using some of its leaves, he pricked out words of faith and encouragement, and these he dispatched to his friends, using the doves that perched on his window ledge as his messengers. From this, according to the legend, we get the foliage and doves that so often appear on the modern Valentine card, while its fancy paper commemorates the messages that were pricked out on the vine leaves.

Up to the early middle ages the festival was almost purely religious, but about that time the romantic boy-meets-girl angle began to creep in. This may have started with the Normans who used the word "galantijn" for lover. Pronounced in the Norman fashion it was probably close enough in sound to lead to the confused idea that St. Valentine was the patron of all young lovers.

Apparently this patronage even included the birds, for the people of those times firmly believed that all the birds chose their mates on that day. Feb. 14 may seem a little early, even for us residents of the evergreen playground, to start warbling out the spring song and building nests, but maybe the climate was even milder in those good old days.

Such literary greats as Chaucer and Shakespeare make mention of Valentine's Day in their writing, but the most amusing reference is made by Samuel Pepys in his diary. He somewhat ruefully admits to buying half a dozen pairs of gloves, garters and other what-have-you's of feminine attire as a Valentine's gift for his wife, but consoles himself with the thought that he would have had to provide the clothes for her anyway. Actually, by the standards of the age, his gift was most modest, as it was not uncommon for gay cavaliers to give jewels and other ornate presents to the ladies of their choice.

Today, after nearly 2,000 years, the celebration has gone full circle, losing its religious significance, and has instead become a time of gaiety and gallantry, a time for romantic sentiment and for parties, although now these are usually for the young and the very young.

At least one group of ladies, like the early church fathers, is adapting the idea to serve a good purpose. For some time now the Brentwood Bay Women's Institute has staged a big annual fancy dress Valentine's party for all the small fry of the area. The youngsters "whoop it up" in fine style with a costume parade, plenty of food, games, prizes and entertainment. Not only do the local children have fun, however, but others who cannot be present benefit, for the institute sends all the proceeds as a Valentine's gift to the Queen Alexandra Solarium.

In addition, one of the patients, a small boy whose parents live too far away for constant visiting, receives special attention from these ladies who make sure that on Feb. 14 his mail contains a plentiful supply of cards and presents. I am sure the good saint himself would heartily approve the use of his name for such a worthwhile purpose.

The big thing to remember about Valentine's, from the masculine point of view, is not as obsolete, and gone in for a supersonic double-action interplanetary ray gun, backed by a 30-day warranty.

Whatever the little chap is using, though, we can be sure that he will be having a high old time on Feb. 14, for this is St. Valentine's, the one day out of the 365 that is officially reserved for lovers, be they young or old.

to forget it. The fair sex, whether they admit to five, or 105, like to know that they are appreciated. They don't mind you lounging around the office all day, drinking coffee or shooting the breeze with the gang while they have to stay home, slaving over the electric stove or shoveling mountains of crockery into the automatic dishwasher. They don't even mind—much—if you sit and watch the TV game instead of cleaning out the basement as you promised. But whatever you do, for goodness' sake don't forget to bring home that little piece of pasteboard, suitably decorated with hearts and flowers, ribbons and laces, to reassure them they are a wonderful sex and that we just couldn't get along without them.

attempting to recover the lode, and has informed me that he thinks he has succeeded.

"Good prospects have been obtained on benches 100 and 200 feet above the present river level, and it is anticipated that paying diggings exist for a numerous body of miners at a future period, when some of the preliminary difficulties attached to the development of the country are removed."

Mr. Nind, after inspecting the camp at Keithley, started for Antler. He had to wait at Keithley for six days before attempting the journey, owing to storms. Then he had to plod through deep snow and bitter cold. He stopped from time to time to take stock of the scenery when the way led to higher ground.

"Where the snow had been swept off by the wind I noticed masses of quartz rock and two specimens of grass. After traversing the summit for some miles the descent into the valley of Antler Creek commences. I should imagine that from Mr. Davis' store (Keithley Creek) to Messrs. Rose and McDonald's claims, which are the first that were taken possession of on Antler Creek, the distance is about 20 miles NNE. . . I found one log cabin on Antler Creek built by the discoverers; the rest of the miners were living in holes dug out of the snow, which was between six and seven feet deep. I remained here fully occupied for nearly six days in settling mining disputes, and transacting other business. Matters passed off without any disturbance, and if all were not satisfied the unsuccessful parties submitted quietly on finding their claims were not supported by the law."

Following further description of the general locality, Nind went on: "Setting the workable ground at a low estimate, there is room here for 1,000 miners. Cunningham Creek, discovered last autumn, but not prospected until after the Antler Creek excitement, has lately attained a high reputation, a number of claims having been taken up and recorded upon it since the middle of last month, and it bids fair to rival Antler Creek in popularity. I believe it is about the same size and will accommodate the same number of men."

The commissioner impressed upon the government that the Cariboo field was of a different character than those closer to tidewater.

"A new description of mines has been discovered, which promises a more lasting employment of labor than has hitherto existed." He recommended that the Gold Fields Act be amended to meet the situation.

"Respecting the gold resources of the Cariboo country, a perfect unanimity exists; but it is probable that many of those now so sanguine, particularly the newcomers, who are unacquainted with the numerous difficulties that must be overcome, will meet with reverses and disappointment; those, however, who are 'fortunate' in placer mining will turn their attention to the discovery of hill diggings and quartz lodes. Hitherto, no one has prospected on the hills, exploration being followed up the course of streams from the necessity of obtaining immediate returns."

Nind told of the arrival of a number of Chinese. They were in no hurry to stake claims, but active in prospecting.

Reporting on food prices he said that flour was selling at 37 cents a pound; beans and rice at about the same; bacon at 65 to 90 cents, and beef at from 30 to 37½ cents a pound—and these prices, 100 years ago were considered to be high! More might be asked after being freighted into distant diggings from Quesnel.

Now, a century later, mining is still being followed in Cariboo. Yes, 1860 was a good year.

VICAR UNDER FIRE FOR PLACARD 'AD'

By RICHARD L. THOMAS
The Islander's London Correspondent

EVERY NOW AND THEN staid old Britain seems to do something which outdoes anything we hear about from the United States—the home of gimmicks and the theory that any means justifies the end, or so we are led to understand. The other day, for example, there appeared on a board outside Christ Church, Greenwich, a notice reading:

GETTING MARRIED?
This church was good enough for Marty Wilde

Mr. Wilde, in case you did not know, is a British interpretation of Sergeant Elvis Presley. He either nauseates you or sends you digging. For myself he sounds and looks a particularly revolting specimen — professionally, of course.

The notice, it seems, was put up by the vicar, the Rev. Gerald Hawker. It was pulled down by Mrs. Clara Berry who thought it was disgraceful. The vicar said he was sorry if he had upset anyone but he was so tired of teenagers getting married at the register office that he thought it might bring them to church to realize that their idol was married there.

There, for the present, is where the matter rests.

Meanwhile we have parsons who invite their congregation to smoke "to help them feel at home" during services; we have another who believes in rock and roll hymns and a handful of others who feel that anything which will get people into the church is justified however unorthodox it may seem. It seems to be very much a case of quantity being more important than quality.

There seems to be something unhealthy about a "pop" singer being used as a church draw. I find myself with a sneaking sympathy for another parson whose comment of the affair Marty was, "I wonder if Christ Church, Greenwich, is good enough for God?" He has a point there.

There is, of course, a counterpart in the crowds of sightseers who always surround a church when the Queen goes to worship there. They make a Roman holiday of the occasion. Fortunately we have not yet discovered a parson who has placarded his church with the information that it was good enough for the Queen, but in the true English tradition we are very apt to get all excited if some parson puts an extra candle on the altar or leaves the word "obey" out of the marriage service.

AND ONLY A COUPLE of weeks ago we had two parsons indulging in a demarcation dispute. It seems that a distraught young husband called on a vicar to ask him to see his young wife whose baby had just died. The vicar told him that as he did not live in his parish he could not go to see his wife, so the boy went off to another nearby vicar who told him the same thing. It seems that the young man lived on the boundary of three parishes and when eventually he reached the right vicarage the parson was out. So he went home and did his best to console his wife himself. The redeeming feature of that tragic ecclesiastical affair is that both priests have been severely ticked off by their bishop, who was obviously appalled by their attitude.

It does seem, however, that not only is there a shortage of manpower in the church, but also a grave shortage of the right kind of manpower. Indeed a priest said only the other day that there was a thriving black market in clergy. Because of the shortage they could lay down their own terms and once they had a living they could do very much as they like — because bishops are powerless to intervene in this country unless the parson can be found guilty of heresy or immorality. Short of that he cannot be moved.

This reminds me of the true and tragic story of an education department stenographer who set the whole town talking once again about the most talked of church dignitary who cannot be moved — the Dean of Canterbury, an outspoken communist who owns a lot of property; a governor, by virtue of his office, of the oldest public school in Britain — King's School Canterbury established in the year AD 600 — but who provides his children with state education, and is known everywhere as the "Red Dean." The other day he was called upon to distribute some prizes at a state school.

The education department stenographer had to stencil the notice to be circulated to parents. She did and in it announced that the prizes would be distributed by "The Dean of Canterbury, the Very Red Dean Hewlett Johnson, D.D." It was not a subversive activity — merely an honest typist's effort to type "Rev." And the v slipped.

MORE AND MORE telephone exchanges in Britain are being opened to the economy and convenience of subscriber dialling to all parts of the country. The economy comes from the fact that all calls are charged for in units, and the value of the unit is calculated on a taximeter basis — time and distance. The most expensive unit is 12 seconds — the cheapest six minutes. Each unit costs two pence.

You can dial any exchange in Britain from Evesham for two pence. If the exchange is more than 125 miles away you will get 12 seconds of talk for two pence which means that the traditional three-minute long-distance call will cost 2s 6d (equivalent to 30 cents) a cut of 33½ per cent on normal charges. The important thing, however, is that you can have a literal 12-second call for two pence if you talk quickly enough. Thus a brief message to fond wife when she lifts the receiver, "Home on the 3.36, love," certainly wouldn't cost more than two pence anywhere in Britain.

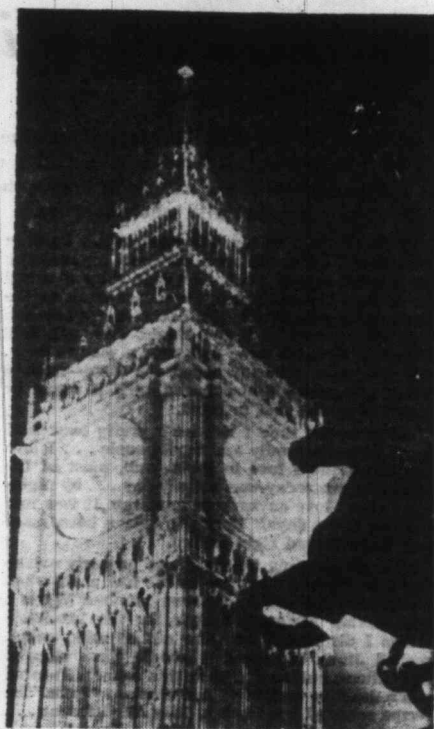

The great snag, of course, in the system is the traditional social pow-wow when two wives get together and talk for an hour. That sort of thing will cost them a packet. In future a local call will rank as three minutes per unit (six minutes after 6 p.m.) and another two pence will tick up every three minutes so that a half-hour talk on the phone to the neighbors costs the equivalent of 20 cents — exactly five times as much as at present.

By 1970 the new system will apply to every telephone exchange in the United Kingdom and provided telephones are used intelligently it will mean a big cut in costs. The post office saves on labor charges because the call goes through automatically without intervention from an operator; the customer saves because he pays only for time actually used. A minute call is charged as a minute (not three minutes) and the Scots will be able to telephone from Aberdeen to Penzance — some 900 miles — for two pence. By night all unit rates have a double value in time so that after 6 p.m. there are 24 seconds of talk per unit for the longest distance and six minutes for the local call.

THE POST OFFICE, which operates our telephones, has a double purpose in its charging routine. The first is make the use of long-distance calls more attractive and secure greater use of expensive equipment which is only partially used, and the second is to cut down the interminably long local conversations.

"These hour and half-hour conversations are disastrous economically," I was told by a post office spokesman. "They tie up valuable equipment controlling junctions in our local exchanges which means that revenue is sometimes lost because junctions are engaged. Not only do we lose the revenue for the call but not infrequently time and money has to be spent dealing with complaints. Someone says that they got an engaged single when the subscriber assured him that his telephone had not rung all day. It has to be explained that the busy tone is heard when a junction is engaged. Then there are people who want to ring the number and cannot complete the call — again we lose the cost of the call."

Under the new system subscribers will pay for what they use. We want to cut down on time used in local calls and we want to get increased use of long-distance lines. Judged from experience in Bristol, where the plan has been operating for three months, things are working out that way. They have had complaints from subscribers whose bills have leapt — due to prolonged local calls which they did not realize were timed — but now that they understand things the great majority of people welcome the new system."

IT WILL TAKE 10 years to complete the change over to automatic working — three exchanges are now functioning but within two years about a fifth of the exchanges will be converted and the pace gradually accelerated. Ultimately, says the post office, I will be able to dial anywhere in Canada from anywhere in Britain. The cost? Problematical, but even at a second of time per unit (the minimum possible mechanically) the cost of a call would be halved compared with present rates on a full three-minute call. The real problem internationally is the very short call. The person who rings Canada to announce "Arrived safely" could probably get away with about three seconds for six cents — and it would have taken probably 40 seconds to set up the call through all the various junctions on the way. But it is a headache for tomorrow and no doubt something will be worked out — possibly a device which will chalk up 50 units as soon as an international call is completed.

Another problem of automatic dialling, of course, is that there is no record of the calls. They are recorded automatically as units and if you want a check recorder to make sure that it has not gone haywire it will cost you $2.75 a quarter — but even then you will not know whether the 120 units added since you last looked was a two minutes conversation with Canada or an 11-hour talk with the lady next door about the sale of work. It is just a case of getting used to a new telephone habit.

After all not so long ago we too had free local calls. Now they all have to be paid for at 3 cents a time. Provided you restrict yourself to three minutes automatic dialling means local calls will only cost 20 cents.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT there are now 10,000,000 television licences in the United Kingdom. They cost the equivalent of $11 each and most of the revenue goes to the BBC — a quarter of it is retained by the government as tax and for collecting the cash and policing the regulations. It is estimated that about 40 per cent of the population listens to the BBC and 60 per cent to commercial television but the position is growing more favorable to the BBC which has always had the majority of viewers over 35. The teenagers favor commercial programs.

Under the reorganization of the Royal Navy, Chatham dockyard near the mouth of the Thames is being closed down. Recently a plate bending roller was sold to a private firm for £1,200. An examination of records showed the Queen had paid £563 for it in 1890 — a capital gain of more than 100 per cent and a most creditable tribute to the standard of maintenance of the Royal Navy.

In Muriel Wilson's Kitchen

GOODNESS KNOWS my intentions were good . . . I meant to have a column this Valentine's Day all dripping with hearts and flowers. It was to be centred around a fine, high-hat, white layer cake with bright cherries sparkling up its inside, with a fluffy pink frosting garnished with whole cherries.

I could see it in my imagination . . . light as a feather . . . pretty as a picture . . . reposing on a large crystal plate. Yes, this column would be special. I would put my best lace cloth on the table, set my beautiful cake in the centre between tall scarlet candles and I might even ask Bud Kinsman to come over and take a picture of it. All this was before I baked the cake—from a brand-new recipe that sounded as if it would be just the cake I had in mind.

Most of the time I ride on a pretty even keel . . . I love my family and most people . . . I love my home and I love to cook—well, most of the time. But yesterday was not my day . . . by night-fall I didn't love anybody or anything. It was just "one of those days." It couldn't have been more lost if I'd stayed right in bed.

The phone rang before I was properly awake and I nearly broke my toe on the hall chair when I answered the call . . . wrong number. When I opened the refrigerator door for the breakfast things I discovered we were out of milk, which spoiled Jim's breakfast. I should have stopped right there, but no . . . with this column in mind and a deadline looming I had a cake to bake. The recipe sounded good and a little bit different . . . it was different alright . . . so different that I couldn't possibly hand it on to this column's readers.

I'm not sure what happened . . . perhaps there were gremlins in the kitchen. They get in occasionally, you know. Jim said, "What in the dickens are you going to do with it? That piece I had for lunch is about all the contribution I can make towards getting rid of it." Well, some of the family were coming for dinner, and for dessert I served small pieces of cake hidden under large helpings of strawberry ice cream. The very large piece that was left was disposed of by some delightful growing boys who were not too critical of texture and lightness.

I may as well make a clean breast of it . . . The very same day I made bread and forgot the salt. I told you it was not my day.

WITH MY FAITH in me slightly shaken I am going to stick to the tried and true for today. With my enthusiasm for Valentine's Day gone down the drain, we'll skip the "Feature Recipe" and talk about everyday family food.

Cherry Bran Nut Bread is in this category . . . it is a good family loaf and substantial enough for after-school snacks for the hungry horde. The recipe blends the flavors of walnuts, maraschino cherries, nutmeg and whole bran cereal to make a sweet, quick bread. It is topped with a crumbly cherry-nut mixture.

Here is the recipe. Sift together two and a half cups of pre-sifted all-purpose flour with three-quarters of a cup of sugar, three teaspoons baking powder, one-half teaspoon salt and one-half teaspoon nutmeg. Combine with one cup All Bran (whole bran cereal). Beat one egg slightly and stir into one cup milk and two tablespoons salad oil. Add to dry ingredients. Stir only until combined. Do not beat. Fold in three-quarters of a cup of chopped walnuts and one-third of a cup of chopped maraschino cherries. Pour into loaf pan (9" x 5" size) and sprinkle with Cherry-Nut Crumble. Bake in a moderate oven, 350°, for about an hour. Do not slice until cold. Better next day.

Cherry-Nut Crumble . . . two tablespoons butter or margarine, one-quarter cup sugar, one-quarter cup chopped walnuts and two tablespoons chopped, well-drained maraschino cherries. Melt the butter, add sugar, nuts and cherries, sprinkle over batter. You can use the glace cherries in place of the maraschino cherries but there is a little different flavor.

Muffins are always popular in our house . . . this No-Fuss Muffin recipe card is ragged from use. Cream one-third cup shortening, butter or margarine with half a cup of white sugar. Add one well-beaten egg. Sift together one and a half cups pre-sifted all-purpose flour, one-half teaspoon salt, two teaspoons baking powder, half a teaspoon each of ginger and cinnamon. Add to the creamed mixture alternately with one-half cup milk. Stir in one-half cup chopped raisins or dates.

For a party touch . . . heart-shaped foil dishes.

Muriel Wilson's Thought for Food

Fill greased muffin pans about half full. Bake in a moderate oven 350° to 375° for about 20 minutes. Makes a dozen. Serve hot with lots of butter.

Here is another for Date Gems which is also very good . . . Cream three tablespoons butter with half a cup of brown sugar, add one well-beaten egg, one cup milk and mix lightly. Add one cup natural bran, one cup sifted all-purpose flour, four teaspoons baking powder and one cup chopped dates. Pour into greased muffin tins or paper cups. Bake in a moderate oven for 20 or 30 minutes. Most recipe books call for a hot oven for muffins. I have better success with a moderate oven not over 375°.

SOME TIME AGO a lady who lives in Santa Barbara and who is a regular reader of "The Islander," wrote to me and enclosed a recipe for Tea Cookies. They are delicate and delicious. The recipe now reposes in my file under the heading "tried and true." The lady's name was Edna, so I call them Edna's Tea Cookies. Cream together one-half cup each white and brown sugar with one cup Crisco. Add one egg and beat well. Sift together two cups sifted flour, one teaspoon soda, one teaspoon cream tartar and half a teaspoon salt. Add one teaspoon vanilla to the creamed mixture then incorporate the dry ingredients. Chill in the refrigerator for an hour. Remove and take a small teaspoon of the dough at a time and roll into balls. Dampen your palms or use flour to keep from sticking. Drop each ball into a bowl of granulated sugar and roll around till well coated. The last time I made these I used demerara sugar to roll them in. Place ball on lightly greased cookie sheet. Place well apart and do not flatten with a fork. Bake at 375° until nicely browned, about ten minutes. Makes about seven dozen cookies. These flatten out considerably, so leave plenty of room when placing them on the cookie sheet.

A Jam Slice is always popular. You can use raspberry or apricot jam in the recipe to follow, but if you use greengage plum jam you will have something special. The recipe is divided into two parts.

THE BOTTOM . . . sift together one cup sifted flour, one teaspoon baking powder, a quarter teaspoon salt. Cut in one-half cup butter to make a crumbly mixture. Add two lightly beaten egg yolks and about a tablespoon of milk to make a soft dough. Pat an even layer of the dough into a 9x9-inch square pan. Break up a cup of jam with a fork and spread a thin layer over the dough.

THE TOP . . . beat two egg whites fairly stiff, add one cup white sugar gradually beating after each addition. Add one tablespoon melted butter and two cups fine coconut. Last, add one teaspoon almond flavoring. Spread evenly over the jam. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° for about 30 minutes. It should be nicely brown. Cool right in the pan, then cut into bars. The recipe calls for a butter icing, but we prefer it without.

So many people have telephoned asking for the recipe for my Christmas Bread that I thought it would be a good idea to give you the recipe again. Although I call it Christmas bread, I make it dozens of times throughout the year. The recipe makes two good-size loaves or four small ones. It is lovely toasted when it is three or four days old, but you have to hide a loaf if you want to keep it that long.

This is the recipe . . . Scald two cups milk. Pour the hot milk over one-half cup shortening, two-thirds cup sugar, two teaspoons salt. Cool to lukewarm. Add two packages yeast that has been softened in a quarter cup of warm water. Add two beaten eggs; mix well. Add four cups sifted all-purpose flour; beat well. Add one cup seedless raisins, one cup shredded citron peel and one cup maraschino or glace cherries. Add about four more cups sifted flour. You should have a soft dough. I don't knead the dough at this point, just mix well and smooth the top over with salad oil. Cover and let rise until double in bulk.

Now turn out on a floured board and knead lightly. Don't incorporate any more flour than necessary. Form into loaves, let rise again till double. Bake in a 350° oven for 45 minutes to an hour, according to the size of the loaves. You can use more or less fruit as you like. When I want it special I put in an extra cup of mixed glace fruit.

The girls in the Reynolds Aluminum Foil kitchen come up with the cleverest ideas . . . Why don't you serve tonight's dessert in heart-shaped dishes? All you need to make perfectly darling dishes is one heart-shaped mold and a roll of aluminum foil. Take a sheet of foil and fold so you have three thicknesses, then mold over a little heart-shape mold. Press the foil to conform completely to the shape of the mold. Trim off the edges with the scissors, then remove the mold carefully. Press the edges smooth. They will look as handsome as though made of silver and they'll add a party-touch to your table. Vanilla or strawberry ice cream served in these heart-shaped dishes will make a real Valentine dessert.

Faulkner's Hope for World

EVIL PEOPLE SPIN THEIR OWN SHROUD

By WILLIAM D. PATTERSON

IT IS NOT a great novel, yet it clearly has the mark of greatness on it. This literary paradox is THE MANSION, by William Faulkner (Random House), the final volume in his three-part saga of the verminous Snopeses clan.

It is a drama of demon-driven people in the deep South, people with an implacable will to survive and to fulfill their mysterious, bestial fate. And fulfill it they do, over the contemptuous but ineffectual resistance of the decent forces in the society around them, until in their own innate evil they destroy each other.

The three protagonists of Mr. Faulkner's powerful tale are Flem, Linda, the illegitimate daughter of Flem's wife, and Mink. Flem and Mink are true Snopeses, rodent people with the rodent's capacity to survive and even to prosper in the midst of adversity. Linda is a Snopes only by association, not by instinct.

As the drama spins out in the southern towns of Frenchman's Bend and Jefferson in Yoknapatawpha County during the first 40 years of this century, the reader is deeply involved in a primitive struggle between the embodied forces of good and evil in which the final common solvent is pity for the human race.

Mink is the fate-chosen pivot around which the story turns, a scrawny, ignorant, stubborn little man, a "pore" white who is magnificent in his obsessed sense of evil purpose and his capacity to endure in order to achieve that purpose. Mink never crawls up out of the swamp of poverty and ignorance that spawned the Snopes family, yet he finally destroys Flem who outwitted the decent world around the swamp in order to succeed.

This conclusion to the convulsive Snopes saga has attracted many readers.

A simple conflict over a cow twists itself up in Mink's distorted mind in a way to compel him to murder Jack Houston, a prosperous, respected farmer near Frenchman's Bend. This event, seen in deep psychological detail from Mink's viewpoint, opens The Mansion. The devious Flem does not save Mink from prison, but later even manoeuvres to have his sentence extended to 38 years.

While Mink rots in jail, Flem prospers, corroding all that he touches in his ruthless struggle. Again, Mink with the tremendous instinct of the Snopeses for endurance, determines to outlive his sentence and to survive in jail so that he can finally be released and fulfill his fate against all obstacles by killing Flem.

This he finally does because Flem, the cruel and resourceful, has apparently lost his will to live after conquering the world around him and finding the conquest empty because he brought neither love nor good to the struggle.

In the end the Snopeses go down to join the decent people they had destroyed.

This book contains passages and episodes as fine as anything Faulkner has ever written. Other parts of it are written out of will and accumulated knowledge of life rather than inspiration and intuition. Still, it is touched by greatness, however unevenly.

WILLIAM FAULKNER
... last of a trilogy

It is a reading experience not to be missed, a serious work by a contemporary writer concerned at the highest level of his literary art with the forces that drive men and the distorted dreams that men live by.

William Faulkner has had the stamp of genius upon him from the time he started to write. The Nobel Prize only confirmed the honors and recognition he had won as a leading man of letters.

Out of the harsh, primitive society of his beloved Southland he has wrung a literature of universal meaning about man's fate.

The Snopeses of Yoknapatawpha County, people with no dignity, but with a consuming will to prevail at whatever cost, are the amoral, mindless force of evil that seems to be engulfing the world around us in the vision of Faulkner. Their own self-destruction is mankind's hope.

Faulkner began their saga in 1925 with a series of tales, then published his first Snopes novel, The Hamlet, in 1940. Next came The Town in 1957 after more years of brooding on them, and now the end in The Mansion.

In this tale, the author says he has put what he has learned in 34 years of reflection about the human heart and its dilemma.

THE STAMP PACKET

Philatelists interested in stamps of the British Commonwealth will be adding a number of new issues to their collections during the early months of 1960, according to lists already released.

Waterlow & Sons are printing a new definitive issue of stamps for Falkland Islands in the following values, designs and colors: 1/4d, Falkland Islands thrush, black and dark green; 1d, Dominican gull, black and red; 2d, Gentoo penguins, black and blue; 2 1/2d, Falkland Islands marsh starling, black and light brown; 3d, upland geese, black and olive green; 4d, steamer ducks, black and magenta; 5 1/2d, rock hopper penguin, black and violet; 6d, black-browed Albatross, black and dark brown; 9d, silver grebe, black and orange; 1/-, pied oystercatchers, black and dark purple; 1 1/3d, yellow-billed teal, black and ultramarine; 2/-, kelp geese, black and red-brown; 5/-, king cormorants, black and turquoise; 10/-, carancho, black and reddish purple; £1, blacknecked swan, black and yellow.

All designs will include the portraits of Queen Elizabeth II and St. Edward's Crown. The stamps will be printed by the recess process on CA watermarked paper.

This will make an ideal set for a topical collector. But do not forget the three top values which, if they run true to form, will show a very appreciable increase in value in a comparatively short time.

Gibraltar will issue a new definite series of fourteen values, probably in March, to replace the current one, and New Zealand will release a full set of pictorials to replace the current Queen Elizabeth designs.

During the year, Canada will issue at least three commemoratives: one for the 300th anniversary of the defence of Montreal, another to honor the 50th anniversary of the Canadian Girl Guide movement, and a third to emphasize the need for conservation of natural resources.

'TIBET IS DEAD'

But Death May Awaken Reds' Enemy

By HARRISON SMITH

IN THE VAST AREA of the Himalayan Mountains, Tibet had been under the benign sovereignty of the Chinese Empire for 300 years.

Last year the Chinese Communists dismissed the Tibetan claim to independence, insisting that Peking has traditionally controlled Tibet's political and religious systems. The 24-year-old Dalai Lama, known as the living Buddha and the God King, was forced by his councillors to escape from his summer palace in the lofty capital city of Lhasa to seek refuge in India.

With a small party on foot, horseback and mules the Dalai Lama covered 300 miles over mountain paths and caravan trails, escaping a mammoth man-hunt by air and land. At the Indian border the Dalai Lama, his cabinet ministers, priests and a general of his army were met by 50 foreign and Indian correspondents.

Frank Moraes, author of a new, fascinating book, "The Revolt in Tibet," was born in Bombay, went to Oxford for his MA in history, and served as a correspondent in Burma and China. He is now the editor-in-chief of a group of newspapers published in Bombay, Madras and Madurai.

The Tibetan tragedy has alarmed all of Asia and especially India. The huge armies in Communist China might launch an attack on India's 2,000-mile frontier. If this should happen, Mr. Moraes believes that all of Asia might fall into the hands of the Chinese Reds.

"Tibet's tragedy," he is convinced, "underlines many lessons for Asia and the world, revealing at once the strength and weakness of the Communist doctrine and system."

CHANCE for PROFIT

In January a set of three (6, 10 and 25 cents) ship stamps commemorating the New Constitution, were issued by St. Lucia and a 9d and 1/3 stamp by British Solomon Islands. On January 21 a 75th anniversary set of three (1d, 3d, and 6d) was released by Bechuanaland.

Somewhat astonishing is the news sent to me by Scott Publications Inc., publishers of the famous Scott Catalogues and Scott's Monthly Journal, that they have sold out their interests to no less than Esquire Inc., two branches of publication that seem to me at opposite ends of the poles. Gordon Harmer will still retain his position as editor-in-chief assisted by Miss Maud Taylor, who will continue in charge of production and office management.

Scott started publication of stamp catalogues and albums 90 years ago, since when the Standard Postage Stamp Catalogues have gone through 116 editions.

Esquire Inc. also publishes Coronet, with a circulation of 3,100,000, and Gentlemen's Quarterly, a specialized fashion magazine for men.

FRANK MORAES
... fearful prospect

It represents the resurrection of a brute force which... would return to the laws of the jungle.

"Tibet is dead," he writes. "But if in dying it has taught a lesson that will save Asia from the monstrous fate which befell it, Tibet, with Asia's awakening to the real character of Communist cruelty and tyranny, might yet be revived and live again."

But beneath his words it is obvious that Mr. Moraes thinks that the vast Communist armies may conquer the continent.

Fate and a .44 Spelled

VICTORIA'S MORESBY FAMILY has been around these parts for about 110 years. Ever since the time Admiral Fairfax Moresby came out here in HMS Portland, in fact. Which is maybe the reason the admiral's youngest brother, William, opened a law office here in 1861.

His son, in turn, also William, tried his hand at law but threw away the books in disgust and went to the Barkerville gold rush.

He in turn had a son, called William, who has been practising law here for over half a century, and if you haven't already guessed it, he also has a son—called William—who carries on the tradition. Which makes some sort of a family record.

The Bill Moresby who threw away the law books and took the trail to Barkerville might be accused of lack of purpose. Instead he turned out to be one of the most purposeful men who ever packed a police badge.

He was just 19 when he joined the B.C. Provincial Police in 1868 and by the time he'd served 26 years his record of achievement would have filled a good-sized book. Up to 1894, when we first meet him, he'd already unravelled enough murder cases to send 25 guilty men to the gallows.

Once, in the Ah Snie case, a Chinese came into his New Westminster office to voice the suspicion that a friend of his had been murdered. Ground for suspicion was the fact that Ah Snie had returned to New Westminster wearing his missing companion's ring. Moresby threw Ah Snie into jail on a minor charge, then went out to find out if a murder had been committed.

If it was unorthodox, it was also successful. For weeks Moresby searched around Lytton, tracing the movements of the pair, to find the missing man had sold some pigs, then vanished with the cash. Eventually Moresby's quick eye caught sight of the edge of a box embedded in a high river bank. In it was the missing man!

Tell-tale markings on an empty flour sack, plus a few other clues put the rope around Ah Snie's neck.

ONE OF THE MOST elusive cases in Moresby's career must have been the gun in the Pat Kane case. It was seven and a half months before he laid hands on it.

Start of the case was around 6.15 on the evening of Sept. 15, 1894, on the Westminster road, just outside the east end limits of Vancouver. It's called Kingsway today, one of the province's busiest through ways. But 55 years ago it was merely a dirt road fringed with bracken and salal, that ran through forested Barnaby. Here and there were stopping places for horse-drawn traffic (it would be three years before Vancouver saw its first automobile) and one such roadhouse was Collingwood Inn, near Joyce Road.

It was as Angus Macdonald and Charlie Anderson, a couple of nearby farmers, came out on the inn's veranda that evening, that they heard the unmistakable sound of a couple of shots down the road. There was nothing in sight, so they went out in the roadway and thought they saw traces of smoke toward Joyce Road. Their curiosity aroused they walked west 100 yards or so, but still saw nothing.

"I'm sure I heard shots," said Macdonald, as he sniffed the trace of black powder smoke in the air.

Then his eye caught some dark stains on the gravel at his feet. Casually he bent down and touched the pebbles. They felt wet.

When he examined his fingers they were blood-stained!

Mystified, the men searched the ditches on each side of the road. Then suddenly Macdonald yelled to his companion. He'd found a body in the brush, face down.

Gingerly the pair turned the dead man over to discover he was Chinese. He'd been shot twice;

once through the head and once through the heart.

EXAMINING THE ROAD in the failing light, they thought they saw footprints and a wagon wheel mark close to the edge of the road. Quickly they aroused the other occupants of the Collingwood Inn and in fast time someone was galloping to New Westminster to report the matter to the Provincial Police.

In due course Chief Constable William Moresby appeared, with Constable Richard B. Lister, Coroner McGuigan and Dr. Bell Irving.

During the next 12 hours this much came to light: The dead man was F1 Mow, 48, a Chinese truck gardener who had on him only a handkerchief and a purse; a purse that contained five cents and two Straits Settlements coins. His clothing had been untouched, so apparently robbery wasn't the motive. Well known to people in the district, his two-horse wagon had been found down near Joyce Road, the horses idly cropping the grass at the roadside.

West of the body was a blanket, that might have fallen from the seat of the wagon, along with the dead man's hat.

Only thing in the wagon was a gunny sack, under which lay a short iron bar wrapped in page 6 of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of Aug. 2, 1894.

MCGUIGAN HELD AN INQUEST where Dr. Bell Irving gave it as his opinion that death from either of the bullet wounds would have been instantaneous. He produced a heavy revolver bullet taken from the body and hazarded the opinion that the first shot—in the head—was fatal, and the second shot was fired while the assailant stood over the prostrate victim. The verdict was murder by "person or persons unknown."

From now on it was up to Moresby, and promptly he assigned Const. Lister to the task of filling in the dead man's movements and his background. Moresby himself started a canvass of the Collingwood district—it took its name from the hotel—to see who had last seen the unfortunate F1 Mow.

A day later Lister had this to report: F1 Mow was a hard-working farmer, renting the nearby Wyse property, and in partnership with a Chinese grocer, Long Ben, on Vancouver's east-end Dupont Street. The pair had a contract to supply vegetables to the CPR hotel and ships. The day before the murder, F1 Mow had gone to the Vancouver Hotel to deliver ten sacks of potatoes, then went on to the wharf to deliver another ten sacks to an Empress steamer. He stayed with his Dupont Street partner overnight, and next morning picked up a load of hogs—delivered from the north shore—and took them to the Empress ship.

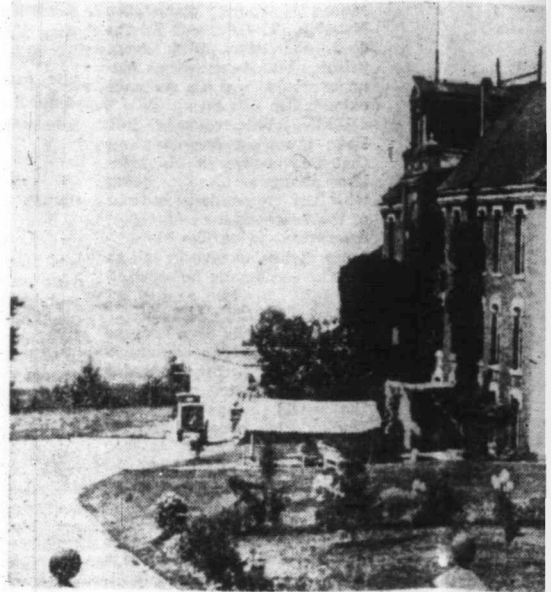

He had lunch with his partner and left Dupont Street for New Westminster about 4 in the afternoon. He was alone, and Long Ben said he saw the sack in the wagon but not the iron bar. He remembered this because the sack was draped over the rear axle, and as the rig was leaving he snatched it off and threw it in the wagon. The wagon was completely empty at that time.

F1 Mow never carried any money, for all deliveries were paid by cheque to the Dupont Street store. He had no enemies, he didn't gamble or smoke opium, and he wasn't involved in any long dispute.

To this Moresby added his quota of information. Farmer P. W. Teetzel, coming from Vancouver to New Westminster, had seen the wagon on the roadside near Joyce Road but no one near it. He heard no shots, but he saw a couple of men jump into the bush as he approached. Turned out they were Macdonald and Anderson, who ducked to cover thinking the gunman was returning.

JOHN CONNOR said he saw a stranger on the road, near the hotel, about midday, a man who seemed to be "just lounging about." He had no conversation with him but described him as tall, dark and muscular. Connor had also seen the Chinese in his rig, alone, going to New Westminster about 5 o'clock.

The story of the dark stranger interested Moresby and keeping up his enquiries, he came across John Milton Graham, a cook in Vancouver's Collingwood district.

D. A. Fraser also saw the dark stranger that afternoon, as well as Connor and Graham.

Next, Harry Howard, living a half mile from Joyce Road, said a tall, dark stranger came to his cabin around 6.30 p.m. on Saturday, asking for work.

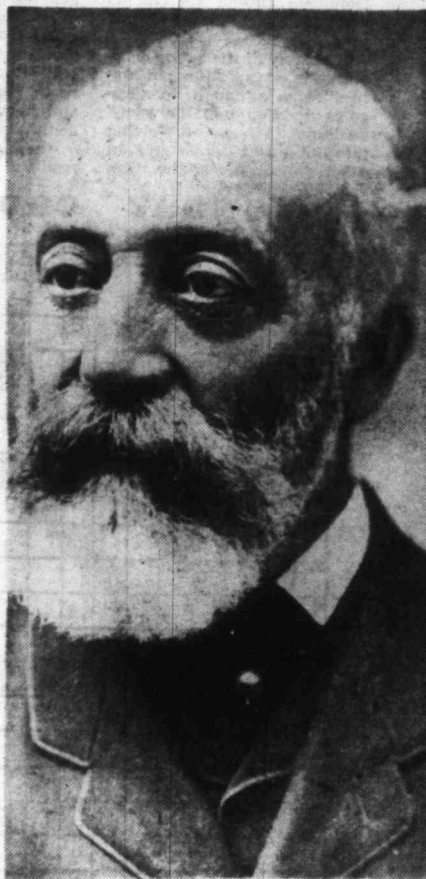

"Which way did you come?" asked Howard. And the stranger, with a southward jerk of his head, replied, "Along the trail." It struck Howard as curious. There was no trail in that direction!

At the scene of the crime, Moresby was also able to glimpse traces of footprints in the road-way, and the same prints were found 100 yards away in a gravel pit, made by a running man.

There was no trace of a weapon, and it was doubtful if the pipe in the wagon had been used. Which left Moresby with a .44 bullet, a piece of pipe, a page from a Seattle paper and the description of a tall, dark and mysterious stranger who had dropped from sight. Motive? None. Weapon? Ditto.

IT WAS NEARLY a couple of months later, on November 24, that fate, in the shape of farmer John Connor, took a hand in the investigation. It was a Saturday night, and Connor, intent on relaxation, pushed aside the swinging doors of Joe Cator's Europe Hotel bar on the Vancouver waterfront to settle his foot on the brass rail and call for beer. As his eyes took in the dozen or so customers, the face of one of them triggered his memory. It was the man he'd seen near the Collingwood Hotel the evening the Chinese was murdered!

Downing his beer, Connor slipped 'round to the city police and returned with Sergt. V. W. Haywood, who promptly recognized the dark stranger as Pat Kane, whose lengthy criminal record included armed robbery. That he hadn't been tabbed before was due to the absence of fingerprints and police photographs . . . they were to come later.

MR. JUSTICE CREASE . . .
He gave the accused life.

Kane's waterfront cabin was searched to disclose a quantity of stolen goods, which was enough to hold him. Next day Moresby—still thinking of a .44 revolver—went over the cabin's interior and although he didn't find a weapon, he found something else. In a pile of old newspapers were some back copies of The Seattle P.I. and page 6 was missing from the August 2 edition!

Although identified as the dark stranger by the Collingwood witnesses, Kane denied any knowledge of the Fi Mow murder as he started a 12-month sentence for possession of stolen goods.

THE YEAR 1894 goes on record as one of the toughest in B.C. history.

Besides a devastating Fraser Valley flood that ruined most of the farmers, this winter also saw a trade depression that almost caused the new B.C. Electric Railway to fold up. In Vancouver they had to cut out the Grandview cars and quit laying tracks on Hastings Street. Everywhere along the coast were bread lines and soup kitchens, as well as an upswing in petty crime.

One of those scooped up by police was Lawrence Mooney. Lawrence, in plain words, was a bum, addicted to the bottle and usually found drinking with Indians along the foreshore. Never found guilty of any serious crime, still, in his many trips to the pokey had made him well known to the police of Vancouver, New Westminster and Victoria. So well known, that he invariably spent his jail time as a sort of unpaid janitor, a trusty.

By May, 1895, Mooney had been in and out of jail two or three times. This time he was in again, and one morning, as he ran his mop over Chief Constable Moresby's office floor, he slyly edged over to the burly chief constable at his desk with the sudden but direct query:

"Still want to find the man who killed the Chinaman at Collingwood?"

Interested, Moresby swivelled around and eyed him.

"You know who killed him?"

"Pat Kane," said Mooney abruptly.

How did he know? Kane told him so.

It was a day or so after the killing when the pair had met on the railroad tracks near the sugar refinery in east-end Vancouver. Mooney was mooching the price of a drink, when Kane told him he had "a racket" with a Chinese on the Westminster road and shot him.

Why?

"The Chink wouldn't put his hands up," was the way Kane explained it.

BEFORE MORESBY could properly evaluate this disclosure, Mooney's next remark quickened his aroused interest. It was about the gun, Kane said he'd thrown it in the bush before taking to his heels towards a gravel pit. And although the calibre of the fatal bullet hadn't been publicized, Mooney was describing it as a .44 Smith & Wesson, a Russian model with a long barrel!

Why had he taken so long to divulge this bit of news?

There was no knowing. There was no reward, nothing to gain. Spite? Maybe.

That afternoon two of Moresby's men were put in charge of a dozen volunteer searchers near the scene of the seven-months-old crime. With a promise of $20 to whoever found the gun, methodically they took sections of the bushland and, working up from the road, carefully examined every inch of the ground. Hours went by. Then suddenly there was an exultant shout from farmer Robert Julian. He was waving aloft a Russian model Smith & Wesson .44. In the chamber were four live shells and two fired cases.

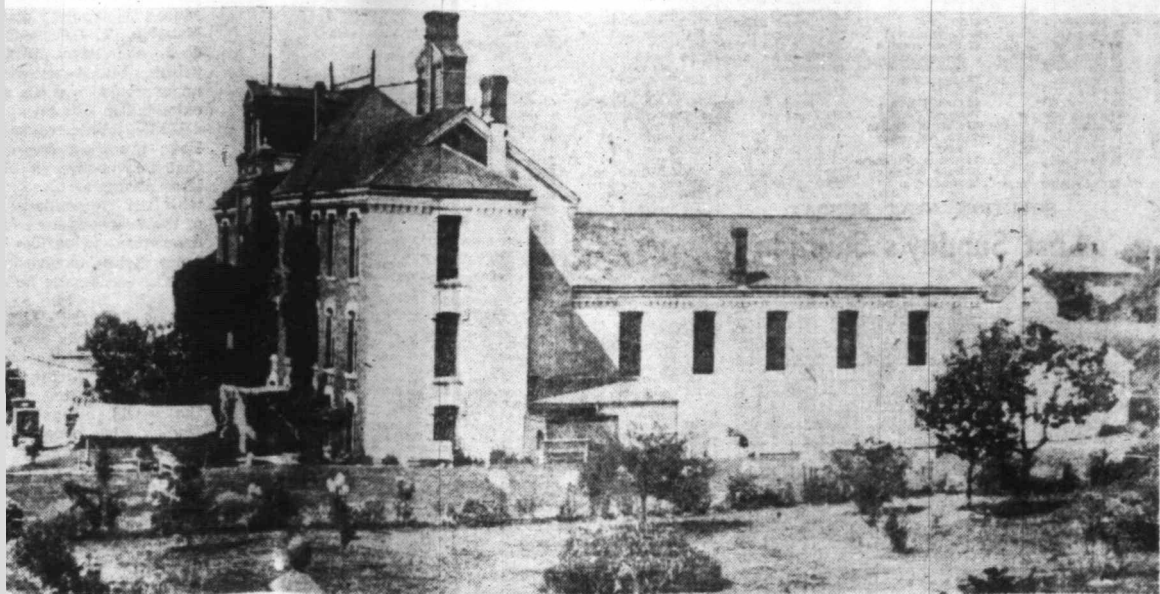

IT WAS TIME, thought Moresby, to try it for size on a jury. And a few days later, at a Vancouver spring assize, Pat Kane faced Mr. Justice H. P. P. Crease. Attorney-General D. M. Eberts gave the Crown's version of the shooting, while E. A. Magee, assigned to Kane's defence, tore into Mooney's character and background, at the same time hinting that the killing might have arisen as the aftermath of a tong war. To back this up he brought to the stand Mrs. Agnes Cook, who swore that when she saw Fi Mow on his wagon, the afternoon he was killed, there were two other Chinese with him.

In rebuttal Moresby produced a statement from Mrs. Cook taken during his investigation, where the good lady had said "the Chinese was alone."

"Mooney is no angel," admitted Eberts. "But he gains nothing by divulging his information."

Finally the jury weighed the evidence and found Kane guilty.

Provincial jail, New Westminster, where Kane was first imprisoned on a minor charge.

Alec Hutchins Made the Long Hop From London to St. Luke's

By BERT BINNY

BY NO MEANS, everybody who has made a big name on the stage started out with that objective—or even the vocation involved—in mind. Many, of course, did, particularly such as the descendants of great acting families. Around 1940, for instance, there were no fewer than 17 of the Stella and Jacob Adler family all active on the American stage.

As a matter of fact it is rather interesting to note that, apparently, more boys and girls have drifted or steered themselves in through the stage door after having served other quite unrelated objectives during the early years of their lives.

An example in the world of music who is familiar hereabouts is none other than Dr. Boyd Neel, dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto, who was guest conductor of the Victoria Symphony last about a month ago. Dr. Neel practised medicine before he turned to music; a pupil, as it were, of Pasteur before he cell of Galen before Goethe and of Harvey before Handel.

But there are others among the greater luminaries of the legitimate stage. Both Louis Jouvet in France and Vsevolod Pudovkin in Russia were pharmacists before they were actors. Moliere, Charles Noddy, David Garrick and Goethe all studied law ahead of drama. Indeed, to begin with, the great author of "Tartuffe," "Don Juan," "Scaparello" and so on, was an apothecary, while Garrick was for some time a wine merchant, more liable for inspiration to Bacchus than to Melpomene or Thalia.

Two famous figures in the development of German theatre were Gotthold Lessing and Berthold Brecht. The former was trained in theology and the latter in the natural sciences. Jacques Copeau was a factory manager.

Both Leslie Howard and Otto Brühm started their careers as a bank clerk. Michael Redgrave was a schoolteacher. Sergei Eisenstein an engineer and architect and François Delsarte, a painter of porcelain.

Alec Hutchins of 4013 Cedar Hill Crossroad, has been a familiar and welcome figure on the stage with the St. Luke's Players for the past seven years. But, before that, he had little or no active connection with the theatre. Music in the family came out in both his father and his brother.

"Also," adds Mr. Hutchins, "I seem to remember playing in 'Hiwaya' when I was a kid at school."

But, apparently, robbed of the company of Minniehaha and removed from the shores of Gitchie Gumee, he forsook the drama entirely until seven years ago.

He arrived in Canada from London, England, some 12 years ago and, after a sojourn in Ottawa, came on to Victoria.

A very conscientious supporter of any organization he joins, he soon found himself very busy with the St. Luke's Players. But he has definite predilections as to parts.

"When a part is first put before me for studying, I look it over in a general way, to see if it is in nature, and if it is, I am sure it can be played."

Mr. Hutchins was not responsible for the above—it was Sarah Siddons—but it shows that this careful appraisal of roles has had the mark of approval and been practised by the very best for quite a few years.

Alec Hutchins has appeared in "The Brunes," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "Laburnum Grove," "Beside the Seaside," "The 728," "For Pete's Sake," "Here We Come Gathering" and "The Rose and Crown." He was responsible for a particularly compelling performance in this last.

Right now the script of Kenneth Horne's "And This Was Odd" is in evidence around the Hutchins' home. Alec plays the butler in this play in March, once more with St. Luke's.

He likes light parts. "There is enough seriousness in the world," he says.

Jennifer Hutchins, aged 12, is following in father's footsteps. She played both in "A Kiss for Cinderella" and in "Man's Estate." Mrs. Hutchins likes to assist backstage, and does very creditably.

Alec Hutchins is vice-president of St. Luke's Players. When the Dominion Drama Regional Festival opens at Oak Bay Junior High on March 21, he will be right in the thick of it. He has been appointed assistant stage manager.

His interest in theatre may have been delayed in the awakening but it is thoroughly active now.

Alec Hutchins is a very solid supporter of the community drama in general and of his own theatrical organization, St. Luke's Players, in particular. He is a regular attendant at the Southern Vancouver Island Drama Festival as well as a participant and, as noted, is serving the Regional Dominion Drama Festival as assistant stage manager this year.

However, of the acting business, he says: "It's not my life!" and, although he advocates "getting into the part," he is not in favor of "delving into the drama too deeply." In other words, his is the calm approach which, as he himself has shown on more than one occasion, provides excellent results.

So Mr. Hutchins has other activities as well. The practical outcome of one of these is evident at once on a visit to the Hutchins' home on Cedar Hill Road. All the dining room furniture is hand-made and hand-made by Alec himself.

Another of his interests is reading and he states an especial liking for war histories. He quotes Neville Shute and Costain among his favorite authors with Tennessee Williams and Leslie Sands his pick among the playwrights.

He mentions "Streetcar Named Desire" and "The Glass Menagerie" in particular when he refers to Tennessee Williams and he was on hand the first night to enjoy the performance of the latter by the Victoria Intimate Stage just about three weeks ago.

Log House Trail Leads Inevitably to

By Ginnie Beardsley

EVERYWHERE I WENT among log house fanciers, people talked about Gus.

"He's Swedish, I think, or maybe Norwegian — name's Gus something or other. He's built more log houses than anybody."

The legend of Gus led me on a zig-zag trail from the Malahat to Fork Lake in the Highlands, up Humpback Road in Goldstream, over half of Esquimalt, out Atkins Road to the partly finished log home of musician Ron Jenkins, who had never heard that the master log builder himself lived about a mile down the same road—in a stucco house!

Finally, recovering from his second cataract operation, I found "Mr. Gus," idle from necessity only.

A strongly and stockily built man of medium height, he is from neither Sweden nor Norway, but Finland, although he is of Swedish ancestry. And his name is not "Gus something" but Otto Gustafson. However, he has been called Gus or Mr. Gus for so long that he might be surprised to be addressed as Otto.

The houses which bear testimony to Mr. Gus' skill with logs are something of a contradiction, too, for they are not finished in the style he learned as a boy in Finland—where it is usual to hew the sides square—but in a fashion which is to the casual observer the same as that of the North American pioneer. A closer look discloses the basic difference: the Scandinavian builder grooves his logs as a precaution against moisture running inside, where the North American simply broad-axes and calks his. Having the grooving, but lacking the squaring of the logs, the style of Mr. Gustafson's local buildings is fairly typical of much Norwegian construction. He uses the notch-and-saddle corner, with both upper and lower log cut out, rather than the simpler top saddle which some builders favor for less rigorous climates.

USUALLY, unless the man for whom he is building makes definite arrangements to act as an assistant in felling trees, or to do his own finish work, Gus works alone, selecting and cutting his own trees (before May, after August, "otherwise they can turn green or black, or anything, from the sap"). He peels the logs, measures and grooves them, notches them, and with no other helper than his trusty gin-pole, raises them into their required positions. He cuts his own shakes, nailing them in an alternating pattern to keep them dry. "Then they don't press on the nails of the ones underneath."

He grooves the open ends of the logs at window and door openings, forces a tongue of a two-by-six into each groove, nails the door or window to the two-by-six. This leaves the window or door frame independent of any shrinkage of the logs, since the two-by-six is not nailed to them.

Where a pegged or ship's deck effect is desired in the flooring, Mr. Gustafson drills the planks with a brace to which a stop device is attached, and fits short, round plugs to cover the nails which are doing the actual work of holding.

Unless the home owner is a do-it-yourself man with experience as a stone mason, Mr. Gus calls in Jack Norton—one of a very few locally trained young bricklayers who has gone into the related field of stone work—to do chimneys, fireplaces, and ornamental stone foundation work.

COMING TO CANADA in 1912, Mr. Gustafson has worked in the woods or as a builder ever since. He spent considerable time in the country around Sioux Lookout, Ontario, and lived in Manitoba for 26 years. There, he built one of the few authentically Finnish log houses, on his own farm, planning to cover the squared logs with siding. The war intervened, however, and with the departure of his boys in the services, Mr. Gus came to the Coast. He built about 100 conventional houses for Central Mortgage and Housing.

The log cabin trail around Victoria started in 1950, when two Norwegians, barber Andy Gilstein and logger Hjalmar Linnars, commissioned him to build two modest-sized log houses on the Sooke Road, just a little on the Victoria side of Glen Lake. These differed slightly in their original design—are growing more different inside with the differing tastes of their present occupants, Cyril Davies and E. V. Buck. Mr. Davies is scrupulously maintaining the Norwegian farmhouse look of his, with its Giltstein-built cobblestone fireplace, chimney and front steps. He plans an eventual extension in the form of a Norwegian-style family kitchen, with an open stairwell to a loft above. Another interesting point about this house is the efficiency of its heating system, which depends on a centrally located heatilator fireplace in the living room, with a heat outlet to the room behind. Three thicknesses of maple flooring are typical of the solid construction.

Mr. Buck, on the other hand, has gone in for considerable conventional lining of his house. This has been the case also, apparently, with a house Mr. Gustafson built in Sooke, originally as a one-room, lodge-style summer home for one elderly lady.

The Mill Bay woods form the very suitable setting for a fourth Gustafson house built from logs on the property. This one rings an interesting color change, with the first three rows of logs stained a reddish tone and those above kept in the natural golden shade. Mr. Gus likes "Timberlox" to achieve this latter effect.

THE SAME MILL BAY property furnished the 12,000 linear feet of logs that went into the building of Surgeon Captain John W. Rogers' Esquimalt home. By reason of its seafront location, its size, and the ambitious character of the project, this house is by all odds Mr. Gus' outstanding local showpiece.

It sits on two commandingly high rocks and straddles a gully. The natural foundation is supplemented where necessary by concrete, and the hollow of the gully holds a rumpus room in its palm, so to speak. Half-log steps lead to the main floor, which consists of a through hall, three family bedrooms, a bath and two powder rooms, kitchen, a maid's room and bath, dining room opening onto an outdoor patio, and a living room 18 by 36 feet.

This handsome room, with its ship's deck floors of alternate four and six-inch width oak planks, consists on its entire sea side of floor-length picture windows. The heatilator fireplace, built of rock blasted off the property, with a slate hearth, can take a four-foot log. It, like the master bedroom fireplace and that in the rumpus room, was built by Surgeon Captain Rogers.

The lodge look, with construction beams showing, has been used most effectively in the living and dining rooms, and in the hall. Knotty cedar follows the roof line in these rooms. This handsome panelling material has been employed considerably throughout the house.

Latches and other hardware touches are of buffed wrought iron. Some of the ornamental plywoods line bedroom walls and ceilings.

The natural setting of this home has been used to very attractive advantage, with rock garden plants and evergreens on the entrance side, and the rest of the property left in its natural rocky state with mosses and other natural rock plants growing in considerable profusion. Present occupants of this house are Dr. and Mrs. W. G. Jefferey, geologists both—he with the government.

FROM ESQUIMALT, Mr. Gustafson went to build two log houses and a matching garage on Fork Lake in the Highland District for the late log buyer, Ed Chan.

Humpback Lodge, built for song writer and berry farmer Rupert Stevens, has probably received more publicity and attention than any other of Gus' houses. The present owner, Alan Kindersley, was a frequent observer and admirer during the two years of its construction, never dreaming that the Stevens' move to California would make the house his. This house is of storey-and-a-half construction, with a rustic staircase of half-log steps and carved newell posts. It sits well among the natural firs.

Fireplace and chimney are of quartz mined by hand not far away nearly a century ago.

After the Humpback project, it was back to Fork Lake again for Mr. Gus, this time to do log and other structural work for Alan Chan, a do-it-yourself man who is finishing his house in his spare time.

In the four years since this latest—but it is to be hoped not last — local log house, Mr. Gustafson has been back and forth to the mainland, building donkey sleighs, high-rigs, and other massive logging equipment.

His 71st birthday, February 9, will have seen him back to work again after a little rest and a chance to get used to his two new pairs of glasses.

"I intend to go on working for another ten years," says Mr. Gus.

It is to be hoped that he will. In a country where logs are plentiful, but young men interested in building with them are rare, the skills of a Mr. Gus contribute immeasurably to the variety and interest of the housing picture.

Marisa Pavan Says

The FRENCH KNOW HOW TO EAT

HOLLYWOOD—Although Marisa Pavan and Pier Angeli are twins, they don't act, talk or think alike. Marisa is rather difficult to know, while Pier likes to meet and talk to people. But the one thing they do have in common is their charm.

I've known Marisa since she first came to Hollywood. She's a serious, hard-working girl who finds little time for play. Old beyond her years, she has a happy marriage with Jean Pierre Aumont. They live in Paris and Marisa "jets" to Hollywood for an occasional TV show. When she was here recently, we lunched cafeteria-style in the studio commissary. There we discussed the beautiful luncheons to be had in Paris.

"It's true we lunch for hours in Paris," Marisa said, "but we eat slowly and our portions are not large. I think it is very unhealthful to eat on the run as they do here in America. And because people seldom take time to have a good meal at lunchtime, they are always snacking.

"I don't gain weight in Paris. We don't have sweets in machines to tempt us or all the billboards with such beautifully displayed food. It makes me hungry to look at it. But I don't think you hear as much reducing talk over there as you do here.

"We eat our most important meal in the middle of the day when we have time to work it off. These large, late dinners are not nearly as healthful," Marisa commented.

"What would you have for a typical lunch?" I asked.

"Perhaps a hot sea food with a lovely sauce and a rice ring with steamed vegetables inside. With this we'd have a good white wine, green salad, cheese, fruit and coffee.

"You know they say the French live to eat," Marisa smiled, "but by taking enough time during meals, they break tensions. You don't hear of people dying from heart attacks at the rate they do over here."

It was obvious that Marisa loves Paris.

"The women are difficult to know but I have many friends now. The French woman is very conscious of fashion. She attends the showings and devotes a lot of time to being well-groomed.

"The newest novelty in Paris is the rage for wigs. Everyone is wearing them in different colors. Sometimes it's difficult to recognize a person as a blonde one night and a brunette the next. But it gives them freedom from the beauty salons because with the styles so complex, the Parisian woman usually has two or three appointments every week.

"The whole key to your appearance is set by your hair, and unless you learn to be a do-it-yourself girl you are at the mercy of your hairdresser," she added.

"Once you told me that there were so many interesting things in life that you wanted to do and to learn that you resented the time you had to spend on grooming," I said.

"I still don't enjoy it," she confessed, "but I am more disciplined. We have to be flexible in life and learn to adjust to those things we don't like. For instance, when I was making 'Solomon and Sheba' we worked in Spain for four months and I didn't care for their shooting schedule from 2 p.m. to 8 p.m. I found it very difficult to relax after working so late. There was nothing I could do to change it, so I adjusted.

"They tell me I don't show it but I'm the nervous type. This is my biggest problem and some day I hope I'll learn to lose my tenseness. I enjoy lying on a board with my feet higher than my head. I think there is something beneficial about reversing the pull of gravity."

"I also find it very relaxing to have a hot bath just before going to bed. I know it's supposed to be stimulating but it has the opposite effect on me. But I think the most successful way to break-tension is with controlled breathing," she concluded.

THE VANISHING VILLAGES By ERIC SISMEY

THE MASSIVE LOG FRAME of an Indian community house stood, for many years, on the Spit at Campbell River, pitiful remnant of a once great Kwakiutl village.

We, of the Tyee Club, played our pet notions as to where big fish should be by positioning the house-posts against other cherished and secret landmarks. In 1954 the house-frame helped me to score. In 1955 it was gone to make way for an uninteresting airstrip.

It is a tragedy that nothing seems to have been done to preserve this vestige of Kwakiutl greatness and the day will come when we will feel ashamed to have allowed the community houses, totem poles, grave markers and house posts of this village to disappear.

The house belonged to Quakee-la-gee, white people called him Jim Quatel. He was descended from the famous Chief Klabus.

Jim's was the last house to be built at Campbell River in native style. Around the turn of the century the Kwakiutl availed themselves of sawn lumber and nails, of glass and air-tight heaters to build houses like white men built. I have been told that when a royal commission visited the coast in 1913 its meetings were held in Jim's house. For the occasion a large, carved Thunderbird guarded the door, while inside, along the walls, native carvings were flanked with Canadian flags.

On Empire Day, 1920, my informant told me, Jim's house was used again—this time for an Indian sports day to which the neighboring tribes had been invited. Union Jacks and Canadian flags, on tall poles, fluttered in the breeze all along the Spit. Outside the house two men shouted welcome to the guests and at the door Wawaditla, the doorkeeper, commanded the people to enter and enjoy the abundant food.

There were boat and canoe races, footraces and other athletic events. There was a football game between Powell River and Churchhouse teams and the exciting tug-of-war game, "gagulkonkalees." In this contest the leaders of two teams faced each other while grasping a stout stick just long enough for their four hands. Lined up behind the captains the two teams stretched, their arms wrapped around the waist of the man ahead.

First one team and then the other gained advantage. The excited spectators shouted.

The teams chanted and rallied to the call, Hey-louk! Gwa-nuk! Hey-louk! Gwa-nuk!

My informant did not remember the teams or the winners. These details had faded from the old man's mind. Faded ... just like the Kwakiutl village on the Spit.

PACIFIC COMMAND'S BIGGEST VESSEL PUTS TO SEA HMCS CAPE BRETON

SHE'S LYING in Magdalena Bay, in a sun-dimmed calm, while her crew of more than 232 officers and men get acquainted with the first escort maintenance ship in the Pacific Command, HMCS Cape Breton.

A ship's company needs good weather to do justice to the the out-of-doors work that goes to the satisfactory completion of the job of painting and deck sanding and scrubbing, and all the rest of the business of overhaul and preparing for sea. Not that Cape Breton was unseaworthy when she left Esquimalt for the Mexican bay on Feb. 1.

But there was still much to be done after she came out of dockyard hands. And the doing would constitute a testing of the skills of her complement and the adequacy of her machine shops, foundry, blacksmith shop, shipwright shop, welding room and all the rest, which make her so valuable an adjunct to the fleet.

Cape Breton didn't look her best when she left Esquimalt. With her wooden decks fouled with paint and oil stains, her top hamper still raw from welding, her housework inadequately scrubbed, and all the mass of paraphernalia on her decks, she wasn't what the navy calls a "tidy" ship. She looked the work horse that she is. But she'll look different.

"There are still months of work to be done," said Commander Maurice F. Oliver, her captain.

A man of long service in merchant and battle fleets, he looked down at the discoloration of his cluttered foredeck and exclaimed:

"Under all that muck is fine, firm fir planking. We'll sand it and scrub it and make it shine like new."

He'll do the job, too, even though he can't find a holystone in HMC Dockyard. For holystoning went out with the wooden deck and the advent of bitumastic for the steel plating.

Because she has a wooden upper deck, no one should get the impression that Cape Breton is an anachronism. That sound planking will be a blessing in the tropics for men below decks. And, in her equipment, the 10,270-ton vessel is just about the most modern thing afloat.

Her function is to maintain operational destroyer escort squadrons beyond range of the dockyard establishment, to assist the ships to keep themselves at sea.

"We are to give technical and practical assistance," said Commander Oliver. "But we are an adjunct of the dockyard. We aren't going to put them out of business. But in emergency, we'd steam to some sheltered spot, if possible, for closer contact with the operational squadrons."

"The measure of our efficiency will be in the man hours of production we can give to escort vessels requiring repair."

"For that we are well equipped and well manned, but we shall need experience."

The sojourn at Magdalena Bay is a beginning of that training. Cape Breton returns to base March 14, after a brief visit to San Diego en route.

* * *

INDICATIVE of her function are her vast stores. Cape Breton will carry more than 30,000 separate items, everything from radar tubes to telephones and all their little parts. That is why her supply department, with 53 hands, is the biggest in the ship.

There are only 34 seamen aboard!

Her crew is made up almost entirely of specialists in all branches of the service.

In her machine shop are lathes, milling machines, fitters' benches, vices, in fact everything needed for undertaking work of this nature in the fleet, except on extremely large items.

A balancing machine is capable of dealing with armatures and turbine rotors and all such equipment.

There are two furnaces in the foundry, which can make castings up to 400 pounds in brass or aluminum.

The diesel engine shop can handle running repairs for internal combustion engines.

In other words, the shops are capable of handling almost any machine and fitting job required by the fleet, a good part of forge and casting work, and most internal combustion engine repair.

If it's electrical repairs that are needed, equipment and skilled hands can deal with sonar, teletype and crypto (coding) machines, maintain small instruments and calibrate meters.

There's a well-equipped shipwright shop, and hands can go into ships alongside to do oxy-acetylene welding and burning, electric welding, aluminum welding and brazing.

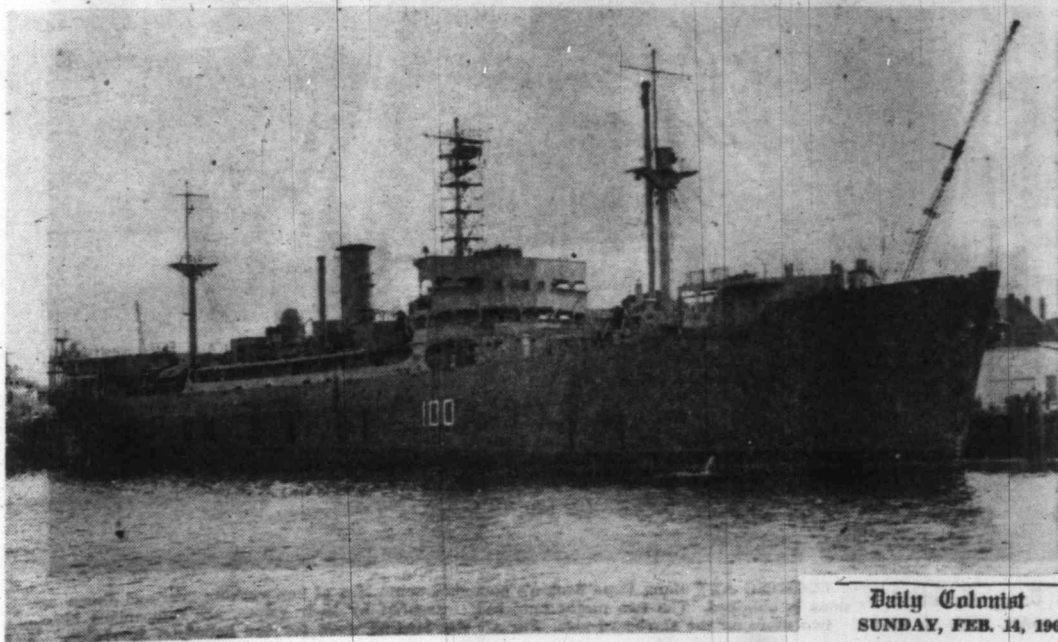

There's a sheet metal shop and a plate shop capable of rolling up to 3/8-inch steel.

The pipe and copper-smith shop can handle steel, copper or brass, and threading, brazing, soft or silver-soldering.

There are the ordnance, torpedo test and battery-charging shops, whose names are enough to indicate their functions.

The ship can supply fresh water, power, steam to vessels alongside.

She has a sick bay which includes treatment and operating rooms, laboratory, X-ray, and an eight-bed ward. And of course she carries abundant medical supplies. The dental clinic will provide complete treatment.

Galley and bakery can provide for large additional numbers. The bakery, for example, is capable of turning out 30,000 loaves a day. There is refrigeration for months of meat and a potato and vegetable stowage that would rival a wholesale house.

The ship is the largest ever to serve with Pacific Command, with an over-all length of 441 feet.

She was built for much the same functions she now serves for the Royal Navy, at Burrard Drydock Company, Vancouver, in 1945, and went to war in the Far East as maintenance vessel with RN fleet units. She was originally HMS Flamborough Head, and remained such until acquired in 1953 by the RCN.

She was a floating establishment for technical apprentices at Halifax until 1958, when she came to Esquimalt. Soon after her arrival that June, she went to dockyard for extensive refit. This is now nearly completed, with renovation of all her shops, modernization of accommodation, and the addition of a helicopter platform over the quarterdeck.

She carries, in addition to normal working gear on her deck, stowage for four motor launches, and two of the 44-foot landing craft known to the trade as LCVPs. They can be used to carry vehicles and men to beach or jetty and are of the same type used so successfully in the storming of European and Far East coast defences.

Eventually, of course, she will have a helicopter in addition to all the life-saving floats necessary for her crew's safety on her decks.

The man who drives this floating factory lives under his own bridge, with a narrow day cabin and a cubby of a sleeping cabin, with bathroom attached. There's a small dressing room, too, which some day may be incorporated into the day cabin — if only for the sake of space to entertain. For the captain of a ship this size has obligations, especially in a foreign port, and the ward room is not always available.

The bridge, with a roomy navigation cabin and chart-room adjoining, is built in the fashion of the late war years, with little windows along three sides but a proper view forward diminished by standing gear and foc'sle deck-house.

However, the ship can be coned from an upper bridge, open to the weather, but giving an impressive gull's eye view of the vessel fore and aft, and allowing for excellent vision for manoeuvring.

Commander Oliver is pretty obviously proud of his ship — and no wonder! She's big and cumbersome, and hard to handle with her single screw, and she has no more power than a destroyer escort less than half her size, but she's functional and seaworthy and impressive. She's a big responsibility, as mother of a fleet.

Commander Oliver is a "Mancunian" and in case that's a strange word, it means he was born in Manchester, Eng.

He lives now at 2660 Lansdowne Road, when ashore, with a very beautiful wife and three delightful children, whose photograph graces a cabinet in his day cabin. The children are Joan, 9; Michael,
7, and Diana, two and a half.

He started his sea career with the Furness people as a cadet, in 1932, when times were tough and 80 per cent of British shipping was rusting at the docks. But he was soon to be watch-keeping when the Queen of Bermuda went troop-carrying early in the war, and joined the Canadian destroyer Restigouche when as an RCNR sub-lieutenant when
Cdr. Horatio Nelson Lay, now a retired Rear Admiral, commanded.

His own first command was the corvette HMCS Cobalt, working out of Halifax.

In Chebogue, he was torpedoed in mid-Atlantic in 1944.
It was one of those acoustic torpedoes which track a ship and in spite of the protective "clatter" gear towed astern to divert such weapons, the frigate was hit. Ten hands on the quarterdeck were lost and the stern of the ship demolished. However, her bulkheads held.

She was towed 1,006 miles to the Bristol Channel, blown on the beach in a gale and abandoned.

But Cdr. Oliver was back aboard next day and the ship was refloated and successfully towed to Swansea.

Admiral Max Horton, commanding Western Approaches forces in those days, sent his personal aircraft to bring Cdr.
Oliver to Liverpool to report on the mishap—because it was feared the Germans had some new weapon which could pierce the anti-torpedo defences carried by escort vessels.

He went to Port Colborne, another frigate, and eventually to the destroyer Sloux, which he brought to Victoria and paid off in 1946.

MEN OF THE STOKER BRANCH, like Del Volk, here, and his mate, G. A. Erickson, spend much of their time in the machine shop working with precision tools like this drill.

He drove HMCS Iroquois, one of the magnificent tribal class, saw service in the Korean war, and left her in 1955.

He was ashore, he admitted without much enthusiasm, until he commissioned his present command in 1959.

"She's a fine ship," he says,
"with a fine crew. This is a team of experts. And we hope to be champions."

GRASS CROP TESTED

THE SUPERIORITY of the S-143 variety of orchard grass has been shown at both the Nanaimo and Courtenay government project farms in tests carried out over the past four years. The characteristics required of orchard grass are high yield, leafiness and late maturity.

Late maturity in orchard grass is especially desirable where it is being grown in combination with legumes. Orchard grass is notable for its aggressive growth habit in the spring while the legumes are quite the opposite and develop even more slowly when grass competition is excessive.

For pasture forage it is desirable to have the proper balance of clover to grass which is attained in the spring by the use of late maturing orchard grass varieties.

For hay or silage crops it is essential to have grasses and legumes reaching suitable cutting stage at the same time which, when using orchard grass, is possible only by selecting a late maturing variety of grass.

Of the ten varieties tested S-143 most nearly met the requirements of high yield, leafiness and late maturity. The maturity date of S-143 was from a week to ten days later than the common varieties, Commercial, Akaroa and Danish, and should be more compatible in the mixture with legumes. The yield of S-143 was 3 to 9 per cent lower than the above varieties, but this loss in yield was more than compensated for by the superiority of S-143 in leafi-ness and fineness of stem.

CHARTRES PEMBERTON WENT to the DANCE for the PRINCES BUT HE WALKED ALONE

By JAMES K. NESBITT

IT WAS A WARM NIGHT in August of 1887.

At "Glenville," the Augustus Pemberton home on Fairfield Road, just above the Five Points of today, bachelor Chartres Pemberton dressed for the ball at "Armada," and then, spurning a ride in a carriage, walked, in full evening clothes, down Moss Street and along the Dallas beach to the home of Senator and Mrs. William John Macdonald, opposite the Ogden Point piers of today.

Chartres Pemberton was the son of Hon. Augustus Pemberton, first police magistrate of Victoria, and Augusta Brew, the sister of Chartres Brew, the founder of the first B.C. government police force.

He was an eligible bachelor the night of the 1887 ball at "Armada," and a bachelor he remained until his death here in 1943. He was tall and spare, with a drooping mustache, and there are many who remember him as he walked by the seashore, and through Beacon Hill Park, studying the rocks and the trees, for he was a great naturalist. He lived at "Roccabella," and there he became a fixture. His sister, Miss Emmeline Pemberton, now more than 90, still lives in Victoria.

The 1887 ball at "Armada" was the talk of the town for months, for not only was Victoria's high society there, but also the Royal Princes of Siam.

The Colonist announced their arrival here: "The Siamese princes and their retinue of 22 attendants were passengers from Vancouver on the Yosemite. . . . A large crowd had congregated on the wharf to catch a glimpse of these real, live scions of the blood royal. His Worship Mayor Fell went on board . . . to give a greeting . . . and escorted the party to the Driand. The members of the party were very gentlemanly and able to converse fluently in English, as well as other European languages. The princes royal are young boys, but bright, active, and extremely intelligent."

"In the party are the Prince Devawongse, half-brother to the King of Siam, and the minister of foreign affairs. He has with him his four nephews, Prince Kitiya, Prince Rabi, Prince Prairte, and Prince Chirar, the sons of the King of Siam."

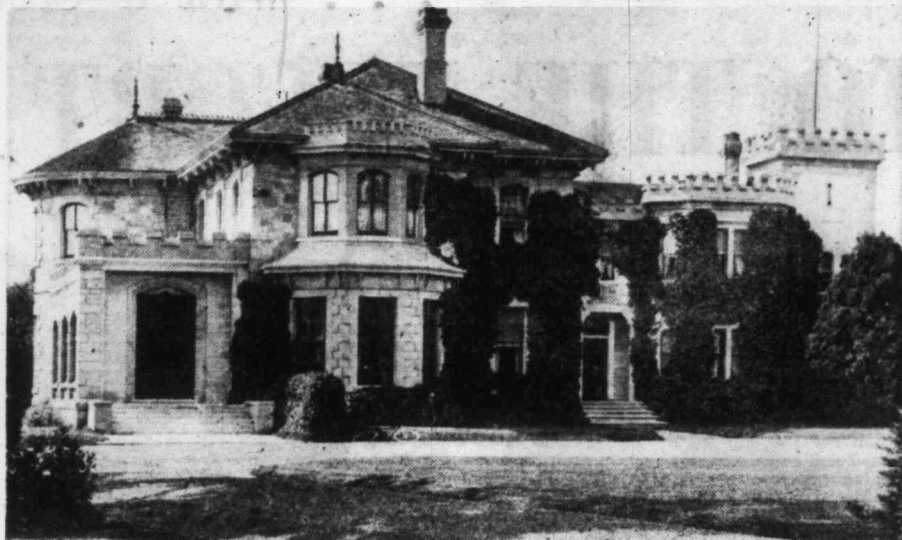

"They have been to Europe to view the wonders of the Occidental world . . . will remain in Victoria until the departure for Japan on the Parthia."

The visit, quite naturally, caused a great stir in Victoria, and everyone of any importance sought to entertain the Siamese princes, but that was impossible, for the visit was short, though it stretched on for some days, when the Parthia was delayed on the mainland.

However, the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Hugh Nelson gave a dinner at Cary Castle, and Victoria's top-drawer society was there. . . . Hon. Robert and Miss Dunsmuir, Mrs. Gleny Anderson, Hon. John and Mrs. Robson, Hon. and Mrs. J. H. Turner, Hon. F. G. Vernon, Capt. and Mrs. John Irvine, Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Pooley, Capt. Nicholls . . .

THE SIAMESE PRINCES had a fine time in Victoria's shops: "Since they reached this city they have enjoyed themselves in riding and driving through our streets and into the country. They are much pleased with what they have observed of Victoria and surroundings. Her streets and drives have especially pleased them."

"They have made numerous purchases—from Messrs. M. W. Watt & Company they bought several cases of goods, principally technical and scientific works on steam, electricity, railway and steamboat construction, water works and fancy goods, the entire purchase reaching close to $400. At T. W. Fletcher's, Yates Street, three cases of the famous Wanzel illuminating lamps and heaters and sewing machine appliances, and kindred goods were purchased, to the extent of $150. At Mr. John Weller's, Fort Street, carpets and fancy furniture to a considerable extent were purchased. Messrs. T. N. Hibben and the B.C. Stationery were likewise visited and selections made. From Messrs. Nicholles and Renouf several windmills, a White sewing machine, and other articles were obtained. An inspection was made of a reaper and mower at work, but as their country is a rice-growing one these would be of no use in fields covered with water."

It was the ball at "Armada," however, which was the most brilliant, the most dazzling affair of the Siamese royal visit. Crowds lined the streets to see the royal princes arrive. The strains of an orchestra floated through the open windows and the company walked through the terraced gardens, under the pergolas, festooned with Japanese lanterns. It was a scene from fairyland.

The Colonist noted: "At 'Armada' . . . Senator and Mrs. Macdonald entertained a large number of their friends at a ball. Amongst those present were the Princes of Siam and their staff; Hon. Mr. Thompson and Mrs. Thompson, Hon. Mr. McLelan and Mrs. McLelan; Sir Matthew B. Begbie, Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Turner, Mr. Justice Wurtelle of Quebec, the officers of HM fleet, and about 100 others. The numerous guests enjoyed themselves thoroughly, dancing being continued until an early hour in the morning."

AND THERE, at the wide entrance, stood the senator, tall and gracious, his white hair and beard distinguished. He had come a long way in this brave, new world, for 36 years before, in 1851, he had stepped ashore here from the vessel Tory, to make his mark in Victoria, and leave his name imperishably on the records of this city.

The building of "Armada," in the 1870's had caused much talk. Nothing like it had been seen here before. There was no residence as grand. It was a decade before Robert Dunsmuir put up his Craigdarroch Castle.

"Armada" stood in the midst of 28 acres . . . "built of stone . . . the building conveys to mind an idea of massiveness and durability. Standing in the midst of capacious grounds, part forest and part meadow, and commanding a view of the Straits, the distant Olympian range, and the less remote Metchosin hills, with lawns in front and back, and on either side a pretty piece of wild woodland that shelters innumerable songbirds, the situation is positively enchanting. The rooms are spacious and lofty, surmounted with elegant cornices and centres, and fitted with marble mantels and every convenience that taste demands or wealth can procure."

"The grand hallway is 21 feet square . . . immediately on the left is the very handsome drawing room, 33-by-18, having a circular front containing three large windows and a fourth window on the west side of the building . . . the ceiling being 12 feet, six inches high, finished with ornamental cornices and centres . . . Next is the library, 14 by 18 feet, with bay window . . . on the right is the dining room 18 by 29, with large bay window facing east and two other windows opening upon a verandah connected by steps with the lawns."

"A circular staircase, with heavy handrail leads from the hall to a 13-foot landing on the second storey. Mr. Thomas Trowce is the architect, and, in this residence, he has reared a substantial and enduring monument to his artistic skill. The carpenters are McKillican and Elford; the plasterer, J. Huntington; the painter, Eli Harrison, and the plumber, J. S. Drummond. The cost of the residence is somewhat in the vicinity of $12,000."

Alas, "Armada" was not "an enduring monument" to Mr. Trowce's skill. The Macdonald family moved away. It had a checkered career, including a spell as a night-club, and then it was abandoned, the windows boarded up, and it was a haunted house for the boys and girls of James Bay, until it was torn down. Today a large part of Armada estate is Macdonald Park.

CHARTRES PEMBERTON saved his dance program that August night of 1877 when the Siamese Princes danced at "Armada." When he was an old man he gave the program to the Provincial Archives, and he recalled the pretty young women with whom he danced: "Two of my partners . . . Miss Helen Good and Miss Williams. Miss Good was the daughter of Alice Douglas and Charles Good; the Williams family . . . lived in the old Marvin house at the top of the hill, at Blanshard and Heywood Avenue; Mrs. Williams had been a Miss Dodd . . . her father was Capt. Charles Dodd . . . "Dodd Narrows" . . ."

"My other partners were Miss "Dolly" Helmsken . . . Mrs. W. R. Higgins; Miss Ada Pemberton, my cousin, later Mrs. Hugo Beaven; Miss Nellie Cridge (Mrs. Y. H. Laundy), Miss Sophie Pemberton, my cousin, the second daughter of Joseph Despard Pemberton of "Gonzales."

Here Chartres Pemberton gets away from the "Armada" ball . . . "Sophie Pemberton was a painter of considerable note — she studied in Europe. It was Sophie Pemberton who painted the picture of Fannin, first curator of the Provincial Museum. When she was painting Fannin's picture, from a photograph, she wanted someone to pose as model for a hand holding a pipe. Fannin was a great smoker, and the photograph of him was taken without a pipe. My cousin therefore asked me to sit in a position, such as a smoker would do."

"Canon Beanlands had taken a great interest in the museum, and was, I think, one of the prime movers in the effort to get a portrait of Fannin. I found that he was very much interested in the painting of the pipe, and was often present during its painting, giving advice and making suggestions. When, afterwards, Sophie married Canon Beanlands, I concluded that he had been interested in more than the painting of the pipe."

And now back to the "Armada" ball for the Siamese princes with Chartres Pemberton: "My other dance partners . . . Miss M. Cridge . . . youngest daughter of Bishop Cridge; Miss Susan Richards, a niece of Lieutenant-Governor Richards; Miss Crease — I am sure Miss Susan; Mrs. D. R. Harris (Martha, youngest of the five daughters of Sir James and Lady Douglas) — I frequently had the honor to dance with her; Miss Ethel Mouat . . . she married Dr. J. D. Helmsken; the two extras (on the back of the program) are Miss Nellie Devereaux (Mrs. Monteith), and Miss Sybil Gray, daughter of Judge Gray."

We see from the program that bachelor Pemberton danced three times with Miss Mouat, but that he did not have the home waltz, having walked to the dance by himself, along the waterfront, studying the rocks and the trees. And so, in the space for the home waltz he wrote: "Went home, 2.30."
